NOTICES OF SANSKRIT MANUSCRIPTS.

1893-94.

CLASS I (a).—VĒDAS (SAMHITAS).

1. तैत्तिरीयसंहिता—भट्टभास्करभाष्यसहिता.

Taittirīyasamhitā with the commentary of Bhaṭṭabhāskara.

THIS is a commentary on the Black Yajur Vēda written by Bhaṭṭabhāskara prior to that written by Vidyāraṇya in the fourteenth century A.C. He is also called Kauśika Bhaṭṭabhāskara Miśra. Bhaṭṭabhāskara writes a long preface in which he speaks of the necessity of studying the Vēda with its meaning. Mere recitation of the mantra is useless, as it does not enable a person to know what he ought to do. A person who reads the Vēdas without knowing the meaning is a carrier of burden; but if he knows the meaning, he obtains all benefit and, having been freed from his sins, goes to heaven. Mantras recited with the knowledge of their meanings become more efficacious and useful. A person who studies the meaning of the Vēdas and performs the ceremonies prescribed in them with the knowledge of the texts, obtains the fruit of the ceremonies. But every person is not allowed to study the Vēdas, but only those who are acquainted with the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.

Every hymn has a Ṛṣi, a Chandas, a Dēvata and a Brāhmaṇa; the Ṛṣi is the person who sees the Mantras; the Chandas is the metre or a particular combination of letters; the Devata is the deity to whom the mantra refers; and the Brāhmana is the passage in which the application of the mantra is given. There is one Supreme Being only, who is contemplated as different deities, such as Agni, Sūrya, Vāyu; and the deities presiding over the earth, the sky, and the heaven are his manifestations. This view, though not original, is the result of the pantheism into which the ancient polytheistic creed of the Vēdas culminated at an advanced stage of the intellect of the Brahmans and other classes of the Āryans who had the privilege of studying the Vēdas.

The Black Yajur Vēda text is divided with regard to the subject-matter into three kinds—Vidhi 'prescription,' Arthavāda 'eulogium' and Mantra 'hymn.' It is again divided by the nature of the arrangement of the letters into Ṛk 'verse' and Yajus 'prose.'

The Black Yajur Vēda was in a different form originally and, in the present redaction, the arrangement of the kāṇḍas is not according to the authors. In spite of this circumstance, the text is to be studied as it is, for it was the text which the goddess of speech adopted and taught to her son named Sārasvata and which the latter who was acquainted with all kinds of learning, followed. The holy Vyāsa divided the Vēdas which were not arranged into different Śākhās, and appointed Vaiśampāyana as the lord of the Black Yajus. He communicated this text to Yaska; he, to Tittiri *; he, to Ukha; and he, to Ātrēya. Ātrēya prepared the pada text of the Black Yajus. This Yajus Śākhā is therefore designated Ātrēya Śākhā.

Bhaṭṭabhāskara mentions the names of the various Ṛṣis † who composed the black Yajur Vēda and are called Kāṇḍarṣis such as Prajāpati, Sōma, Agni, Viśvē Dēvas, Saṁhita Upaniṣads, Yājñika Upaniṣads and Vāruṇa Upaniṣads, Havyavāha, Svayambhu Brahma. Tarpaṇas, 'offerings of water,' and hōmas, 'throwing fuel, rice cakes and the like into the fire' are made to honor them;

* This Tittiri must have been a teacher of the Black Yajur Vēda; and the epithet of Taittirīya applied to it must be derived from the name of the teacher and has no connection with the Tittiri birds. The story of the birds eating the Yajur Vēda vomited by Yājñavalkya must be a pure fiction.

प्रजापतिं काण्डऋषिं तर्पयामि ॥ सोमं काण्डऋषिं तर्पयामि ॥ अग्निं काण्डऋषिं तर्पयामि ॥ विश्वान्देवान् काण्डऋषीन् तर्पयामि * * * * ॥ and their names are thus preserved. With regard to the fifth, sixth and seventh Rṣis, I have to observe the so-called names are not the names of the Rṣis who composed the Upaniṣads, but the Upaniṣads themselves. Perhaps the Upaniṣads were composed by certain Rṣis whose names are not known and, owing to this circumstance, the very Upaniṣads are treated as their own Rṣis.

According to tradition the author of the commentary on the Yajur Vēda is said to have lived about 950 A.C. I hear that he has written commentaries on Ṛgvēda and Sāmavēda. Dr. Burnell quotes in his Catalogue of Tanjore Library the following stanza * from which he infers that Bhaṭṭabhāskara was a Telugu man :—

एष निष्पावके शाके कौशिकान्वयजन्मना ।
भट्टभास्करमिश्रेण ज्ञानयज्ञः प्रकीर्तितः ॥

The words निष्पावके शाके added to his name will make it Anumula Bhaṭṭabhāskara, Anumula † meaning in Telugu "of the plant Phaseolus radiatus," a family name in the Telugu country added to many proper names. Some pandits suspect that the stanza gives the date of the composition of the Bhāṣya of Bhaṭṭabhāskara and interpret निष्पावके शाके as 'in the Śāka year 1410,' which is equal to 1489 A.D. This date is inconsistent as Bhaṭṭabhāskara is quoted by Mādhava, who flourished about the middle of the fourteenth century. I would suggest the following correction which will make the verse yield a proper meaning consistent with the known chronological datum. If we change व into प, the word will read as निष्पापक whose arithmetical value will be 1110 and निष्पापके शाके will mean "in the Śāka year 1110," that is, 1189 A.D. This date roughly approaches the age which is already assigned to Bhaṭṭabhāskara by tradition, viz., 950 A.D. Unless such a correction is made, the stanza becomes unmeaning; for what is meant by saying that Bhaṭṭabhāskara composed the Bhāṣya 'in the plant Phaseolus radiatus'? This is the literal meaning and cannot indicate that Bhaṭṭabhāskara was surnamed Anumula. What is gained by adding the information that the family name of Bhaṭṭabhāskara was Anumula? While the word निष्पावक is sufficient to indicate "Phaseolus radiatus," why should the word शाक be added? Dr. Burnell's meaning is far fetched and unwarranted by the syntactical position and construction of the words निष्पावके शाके. The only possible and consistent meaning seems to be what I have suggested.

* The same stanza occurs at the end of the commentary on the second Kâṇḍa.
† Anumula = anumulu 'the plant' and 'a' a genitive suffix.

In every Vēda, there are passages, expressions and words which have remained unintelligible, notwithstanding the existence of Sāyana's commentary and other helps for interpretation, and the attempts of European Vedic scholars who have done much by their critical and comparative study. The commentary of Bhaṭṭabhāskara, if published and made accessible to Sanskrit scholars, will be of much use in throwing light on such passages, expressions and words. This work has been undertaken by A. Mahādēva Śastriyar, B.A., Curator, Government Oriental Library, Mysore, and three volumes have been issued containing the commentary of the first two Kāṇḍas.*

(d).—ŚRAUTASŪTRA.

2. आपस्तम्बप्रवरसूत्रं—कपर्दिभाष्यसहितम्.

Āpastambapravarasūtra with Kapardibhāṣya.

The Āpastambaśrautasūtra consists of thirty praśnas of which the first twenty-five have been commented upon by Dhūrtasvāmi according to Dr. Burnell, and of the portion commented upon by Kapardisvāmi we have only fragments, such as the commentary of the Śulbasūtra, Pravara and Paribhāṣāsūtras. According to Caundappa, the author of Prayōgaratnamālā,† the number of praśnas of the Śrautasūtra are thirty only, and he excludes the two praśnas on Pitṛmēdha which are added by some to the sūtras and the number of praśnas thus becomes thirty-two. Dhūrtasvāmi and Kapardisvāmi may have been contemporaries, or the latter, posterior by some years. They lived in the early part of the eighth century A.C. Kapardi has been regarded as a great authority with regard to the interpretation of the Śrautasūtra, as can be seen from the way in which he is mentioned by Rāmānujācārya in his Vedārthasangraha and by Sudarśanāçārya.* The Pravarasūtra is a portion of the twenty-fourth praśna and the Paribhāṣāsūtra also occurs in the same praśna.

3. आपस्तम्बसूत्रस्य धूर्तस्वामिभाष्यस्य कौशिकरामकृता वृत्तिः.

Kauśika Rāma's glossary on the commentary of the Āpastambasūtra by Dhūrtasvāmi.— Nothing is known about the author except that he belonged to the Kauśika gōtra, and was an agnicit (a person who performed a sacrifice). There is a copy of the work in the library of the India Office written about the beginning of the 17th century. Vide Eggeling's Catalague, Vol. I, page 56. The manuscript under notice ends with a portion of the first paṭala of the fourth praśna.

(e).—GṚHYA AND DHARMA SŪTRAS.

4. जैमिनिगृह्यसूत्रव्याख्या सुबोधिनी.

Jaiminigṛhyasūtravyākhyā Subōdhinī is a commentary on the Jaimini Gṛhyasūtra which belongs to the Sāma Vēda and is mentioned in a list of the Gṛhyasūtras given by Āpastamba in his Smṛti and quoted on p. 7. The Jaiminīya is one of the three schools of the Sāma Vēda, the other two being the Rāṇāyanīya and the Kauthuma. The adherents of the Jaiminīya are very few and their mode of chanting the Ṛk is very peculiar. I have not seen any manuscript of the Gṛhya; and a careful search must be made to bring it to light.* As every Gṛhya presupposes the existence of a Śrautasūtra, there should be a Śrautasūtra connected with the Jaiminīyagṛhyasutra, and this inference is supported by the fact that Dhanvin, who has written a commentary on the Drāhyāyaṇa or Khādirasūtra of Rāṇāyanīya Śākha, has also quoted the opinion of Jaimini in the commentary.

The work under notice was written by Śrīnivāsa who says that he composed the commentary after consulting the previous Kārikās, Vṛttis and the works of Manu and others, and after taking into consideration the usages of great men and a priori reasonings. He quotes all the important mantras to be repeated at the performances of the Gṛhya ceremonies and the reader is saved the trouble of referring to the Mantrasamhita. In the eighteenth Khaṇḍa Jaimini refers to Audgāhamāni in the passage सर्वाणि लोमनखानि वापयेत् शिखावर्जमित्यौद्गाहमानिः ॥ and the commentator observes समिदाधानानन्तरमुदकादानाद्यावपने त्वयं विशेषः औद्गाहमानिराचार्यः आचार्यग्रहणं पूजार्थम् ॥

The first praśna † treats of the gṛhya ceremonies such as the marriage, the upanayana, &c., and contains twenty-four Khaṇḍas and the second praśna treats of funeral ceremonies and seems to contain five Khaṇḍas. At the end of the fourth Khaṇḍa there is the concluding passage चतुर्थः खण्डः समाप्तः ॥; but, at the end of the book there is no reference to the end of the fifth Khaṇḍa; and the book ends with the following, हरिः ओँ ॥ समाप्तोऽयं ग्रन्थः ॥

Vaikhānasasūtra.—This sūtra is the last of the Gṛhyasūtras. Just as every Gṛhyasūtra has a Śrautasūtra; this also has one. ‡

* A manuscript of the work was subsequently discovered near Trichinopoly and a transcript of it was made for the Library in 1896–97.

† According to the manuscript of Gṛhyasūtra collected in 1896–97, the first praśna contains 25 Khaṇḍas and the second 9 Khaṇḍas.

In Vaidyanātha Dīkṣita's Smṛtimuktāphala the following passage occurs :—

इति वैखानसप्रोक्तमिति च वासिष्ठवामनपाद्मपुराणादिषु तदुपबृंहणात् ॥

The first two lines which are quoted from a work written by Vaikhānasa do not occur in the manuscript under notice and must be referred to a Vaikhānasa Smṛti or Agama which treats of the worship in the Vaiṣṇava temples like the Nāradapāñcarātrāgama.

The author of this sūtra is referred to in Manusmṛti in the following stanza:—

पुष्पमूलफलैर्वापि केवलै वर्तयेत्सदा ।
कालपक्वैः स्वयं शीर्णैः वैखानसमते स्थितः ॥

Kullūkabhaṭṭa, a commentator of the Smṛti, explains वैखानसमतम् as विखनस प्रोक्तं सूत्रं वैखानसं मतं तत्र हि वानप्रस्थस्य धर्मस्य पूर्ण उपदेशः । In the Śākuntala nāṭaka there is a reference to the usage of Vānaprastha's abstaining from sexual intercourse. A commentator of the Śākuntalā called Śrīnivāsa who belonged to the Vaikhānasasūtra has added some interesting notes on the word Vaikhānasa,* which are quoted below. The followers of this sūtra are very few and in fact, as far as my enquiry goes, are found only as the arcakās or priests of the Vaiṣṇava temples. The word Vaikhānasa comes from Vikhanas which originally means a person who digs up the roots of trees and plants from वि + खन् 'to dig up' and was applied to a person, either a Brahmin, a Kṣatriya or a Vaiśya who, having become old, made over all his property to his son and retired to forest with or without his wife. He lived on the fruits and roots of trees, remained in forests and avoided going to towns and villages. He wore matted hair and clothes prepared out of the bark of trees. He took only one meal a day or two and spent his time in performing many religious ceremonies and reading the Upaniṣads and other works which treat of Brahma, the Supreme being.

Originally, Brahmins of different sūtras, such as, Āśvalāyana, Āpastamba, Bōdhāyana, &c., retired to forests and lived there together. In course of time, mendicants, who led the life of an householder (gṛhastha) and lived in forests either by the produce of the trees and vegetables there, or by the alms obtained in towns and villages, mixed with the Vānaprasthas and formed one community with them. Kāḷidāsa refers to the gathering of the Vaikhānasa girls in his Śākuntala, from which word we have to understand the unmarried daughters of those persons who lived in forests with their wives and children and were not Vānaprasthas.

The Vaikhānasasūtras were composed by a learned person of the community, whose proper name is not known and who is known by the common name of his community, viz., Vikhanas. The original rigid and stringent customs of the Vānaprastha stage of life have not been much affected by their adoption of a new sūtra called Vaikhānasa sūtra. The rise of a new sūtra among the Brahmins who had their own definite sūtras for the performance of the Vaitānika and gṛhya ceremonies is analogous to the rise of the Atharva Vēda as a separate Vēda among the Brahmins who originally belonged to the Ṛig, Yajus and Sāma Vēdas.

The duties of a Vānaprastha are so difficult and infeasible, and the rules are so stringent that he is considered the best of all the sages and that, in course of time, the Vānaprasthāśrama, that is, the third Âśrama became extinct; and accordingly we have the passage quoted below * which says that the begetting of a child by the brother-in-law (husband's brother) and the life of a Vānaprastha are prohibited in the Kaliyuga. Owing to the modifications and changes of government, religion and society in ancient India, the Vānaprastha stage of life fell into disuse, and the few people who were known as Vaikhānasas were diverted into the services of the temples of Viṣṇu. The priest of most of the temples of Viṣṇu is a follower of the Vaikhāṇasa sūtra and generally retains his original custom of not being branded with the heated wheel and conch emblems of Viṣṇu. But, as a rule, all

* अयं च वानप्रस्थाश्रमः देवरेणसुतोत्पत्तिः वानप्रस्थाश्रमग्रह इति कलौ निषिद्धः॥

Vaiṣṇavas have the branded marks, and the absence of such emblems in the temple priests causes much annoyance to every pious Vaiṣṇava; and there have been, accordingly, attempts in many places to compel the priests or nambiyārs, as they are called, to adopt the universal custom of branding the body, which have, however, had a very limited success. In many of the temples, the priests have continued the old custom and have not been branded. It is said that the Vaikhānasas perform a ceremony which corresponds to the Cakrāṅkana or branding ceremony of the ordinary Vaiṣṇavas. While they peform the puṁsavana ceremony, an āhuti of paramānna or rice pudding is made into the fire, and the remainder is eaten by the pregnant woman after dipping the wheel and conch emblems of Viṣṇu into it. In this way, it is asserted, that the child in the womb receives the religious mark which among the other Vaiṣṇavas is impressed on the person of the child after it is born. But this way of impressing the mark is not prescribed in the Vaikhānasagṛhya contained in the manuscript under notice (vide the Extracts).

The portion of the Vaikhānasa sūtra contained in the manuscript under notice is divided into three parts; the first, Gṛhyasūtra, the second, Dharmasūtra, and the third, Pravarasūtra. The Gṛhyasūtra is divided into seven praśnas:—

1st	praśna having	21	khaṇḍas,
2nd	do.	18	do.
3rd	do.	23	do.
4th	do.	14	do.
5th	do.	15	do.
6th	do.	20	do.
7th	do.	9	do.

The Dharmasūtra contains three praśnas.

1st	praśna having	11	khaṇḍas,
2nd	do.	15	do.
3rd	do.	15	do.

The Pravarasūtra contains one praśna of 8 khaṇḍas.

The Gṛhyasūtra is long and contains about 1,250 granthas and the remaining four praśnas about 500.

6. कपर्दिकारिका

Kapardikārikā, memorial verses on the Grihyasūtra of Āpastamba according to the Bhāsya of Kapardi. The work is called Kapardikārikā, because it was believed to have been written by Kapardi. In two places Kapardi is referred to and there is also a reference to Śivasvāmi in the following passage :—

यज्ञोपवीतकालः स्याद्वाचने कृत आशिषः ।
पुरस्तात्समिदाधानात् शिवस्वामिमते न तु ॥

The work contains general rules and principles with reference to the Gṛhya or household ceremonies and is divided into ten paṭalas and ends with the following colophon : कपर्दिस्वामिना उक्ताः कारिकाः समाप्ताः. Kapardi is referred to by Rāmānujacharyar.

CLASS II.—GRAMMAR.

7. अमोघवृत्तिः.

Amōghavṛtti is a commentary on the Vyākaraṇa of Śākaṭāyana called Śabdānuśāsana. This latter was printed in Madras three years ago by Dr. Oppert with a commentary called Prakriyāsaṅgraha which explains the sūtras of Śākatāyana in a synthetical order just as the Siddhāntakaumudi of Bhaṭṭōjidīkṣita does those of Pāṇini. The Amōghavṛtti comments on the aphorisms of Śākaṭāyana in their own order and bears the same relation to the original which the Kāśīkāvṛtti does to the sūtras of Pāṇini. The grammar of Śākaṭāyaṇa succeeded Pāṇinī's Aṣṭádhyáyī and therefore is clearer and simpler and can be studied more easily than the imperfect and cumbersome sūtras of Pāṇinī. Śākaṭāyana is a Jaina priest and is styled Srutakēvalidēśīyācārya. He refers in his grammar to Indra, * Siddhanandi and Āryavajra who were also Jains ; Yakṣavarma, who wrote a commentary named Cintāmaṇi on the grammar of Śākaṭāyana, speaking of the merit of the grammar, says that whatever is stated in the grammars of Indra, Caṇdra and others are found in the grammar of Śākaṭāyana and whatever is not found in the latter are not found elsewhere.* There is no doubt that a certain Śākaṭāyana who was a great grammarian is quoted by Pāṇinī, Patañjali and Yáska; and his grammar was lost long ago; but his namesake who wrote the existing grammar called Śabdānuśāsana was quite a different person from the older Śākaṭāyana. Professor Keilhorn says "The grammar of the old Śākaṭāyana must have been lost in very early times, for, so far as I know, there is no reference to it in any grammatical work later than Pāṇini." † There is a reference to a later Śākaṭāyana, and to his work Śabdānuśāsana in Durgadāsā's commentary on Kavikalpadruma; and this is the Śākatāyana, I think, who is referred to in Siddhāntakaumudī, Lingābhaṭṭīya, Tīkāsarvasva, Mallinátha's commentaries, Prauḍhamanōramā, Vyākhyāsudhā of Bhānudīkṣita and in Hēmacandra's commentary of his own lexicon Abhidhānacintāmaṇi. ‡ Durgādāsa's mention of the Śabdānuśāsana as the work of Abhinavaśākaṭāyana justifies our identifying that author and his work with the present Śākaṭāyana and his work Śabdānuśāsana respectively.

The grammar of Śākaṭāyana is divided into four adhyāyas and each adhyāya into four pādas and the whole grammar contains three thousand two hundred and forty-three sūtras.

With regard to the date of Śabdānuśāsana the most ancient reference to it is found in the Kāśikāvṛttì of Jayāditya who flourished about the end of the eighth century A.C., under the sūtras अनुर्हीने च I, 4-86. and उपोऽधिके च I, 4-87, in the passages अनुशाकटायनं वैयाकरणाः ॥ उपशाकटायनं वैयाकरणाः ॥ "Every grammarian is inferior to Śākaṭāyana."

8. पदमञ्जरी.

Padamañjarī is a commentary on the Kāśikāvṛtti of Jayāditya and Vāmana who wrote the vṛtti on the sūtras of Pāṇini. It was written by Haradatta, who was the son of Rudrakumāra and younger brother of Agnikumāra. His preceptor was Aparājita. A Haradatta is quoted in the Nakulīśapāśupatadarśana of Sarvadarśanasaṅgraha of Mādhava. A portion of the Bhaviṣyōttara Purāṇa containing the history of Haradatta, who is considered an incarnation of god Śiva, has been printed in the south in the Grantha character; and consists of twelve chapters from the fifty-fourth to the sixty-fifth chapter. It ends with the following colophon :—

इति भविष्योत्तरपुराणे पूर्वभागे शिवभक्तमाहात्म्ये हरदत्ताचार्यचरिते आचार्यकथनं नाम पञ्चषष्टितमोऽध्यायः ॥

Then follows a stanza which contains the date of Haradatta's death, occurring at the end of the book :—

कल्यादौ च चतुस्सहस्रसहिते यत्रैकविंशोनके
पुष्ये मासि विलंबिनाम्नि खमगादष्टप्रजो मौद्गलः ।
पञ्चम्यां सितपक्षके भृगुदिने सह्यात्मजोदक्तटे
कंसग्रामनिवासिभिस्सुदर्शनः सार्धं विमानोज्ज्वलः ॥

The date referred to is 4,000 years past in the Kaliyuga minus 21, that is, 3979; and this date corresponds to 878 A.D.

In the same volume is printed, along with the portion of Bhaviṣyōttara Purāṇa, one chapter from Śivarahasya, the colophon of which is as follows :—

इति श्रीशिवरहस्ये नवमांशे गौरीहरसंवादे हरदत्तचरितो नामसप्तदशोऽध्यायः ॥

In this work, there is a rough reference to the age of Haradatta in the passage पुनः कलौ सहस्राणांत्रितयानन्तरं शिवे "After 3,000 years in the Kaliyuga."

From the portions of the Bhaviṣyōttara Purāṇa and the Śiva-rahasya we learn the following facts of his life :—

In Kaṁsapura now called Kañjanūr in the Tanjore district, there was a Brahmin named Vāsudēva, who was a leader of the Vaiṣṇavas. He was devoted to the worship of Viṣṇu, studied the Pāñcarātrāgama and hated Śiva and his worshippers. Having had no issue, he made penance towards Viṣṇu who, being propitiated by his devotion and religious performances, appeared before him and promised him the boon of a son. Before this, Viṣṇu who had been cursed by Bhṛgu performed penance (for the removal of the curse) on the Mandara mountain towards Śiva who, being pleased, told Viṣṇu to go to Kaṁsapura and perform a separate penance there, as that which was already performed could only atone for the sin committed against the god Śiva. Viṣṇu, therefore, went to Kaṁsapura to make penance to atone for the displeasure of Bhṛgu and remove the evil effect of his curse. He was also told by Śiva to be born as a son to the Brahmin Vāsudēva who having no issue would perform penance towards Viṣṇu. To carry out the order of Śiva, Viṣṇu asked his wife Lakṣmī to be born as a daughter to a Brahmin named Supratīka. Within a short time after Vāsudēva got the boon of Viṣṇu, his wife conceived and in due course, was delivered of a male child who was very beautiful and healthy, and caused infinite joy to his parents. The child was named Sudarśana and was brought up by the parents very carefully. When he grew three years' old, the father decked him with bright jewels and put on his forehead the trident mark and allowed him to walk in the street. But the boy, having met Śaiva devotees in the street, asked them vibhūti (ashes) and rudrākṣa beads which were worn by them as the emblems of Śaivism. They wondered at the piety, intelligence and brilliancy of the young boy and gave him ashes and rudrākṣa rosaries and necklaces, which he wore after rubbing away the Vaiṣṇava marks on his forehead. He then went to the temple of Śiva and worshipped him in the midst of other devotees. This extraordinary conduct of the boy attracted the notice of the inhabitants of the town and reached the ears of the boy's father who, much enraged at the sacrilegious conduct of the boy, punished him severely. He obeyed the father by wearing Vaiṣṇava marks in his presence, and the moment he was away, the boy, resuming his Śaiva habits, went to the Śaiva temple of Kaṁsapura to worship the god Agnīśvara. When he was five years' old, his father performed to him the Upanayana ceremony and told him not to go to Śiva's temple nor wear ashes and rudrākṣa beads. But he disregarded his father's commands, went to the temple of Śiva and worshipped him. The father, having known this, told his wife not to admit the son into the house nor give him food. In despair, the boy went to the temple and prostrating himself before the god, praised him in such a way that the god appeared before him and converted him into a great scholar acquainted with Vēdas, Śāstras and every other branch of literature and gave him the name of Haradatta. With these gifts, the boy returned home and challenged his father to a public debate on the comparative greatness of Śiva and Viṣṇu. All the Vaiṣṇavas of the town sided with the father, and all the Śaivas with the son. It was stipulated that, if the father succeeded in establishing the superiority of Viṣṇu, the son and all the Śaivas were to be converted to Vaiṣṇavism, and, if the son succeeded, the father and the Vaiṣṇavas should become Śaivas. Having heard of the great religious controversy, Śivaliṅgacōla, the king of the Chōḷa country, was also present at the debate. The son became victorious and all the Vaiṣṇavas of the town including the father of Haradatta embraced Śaivism. The king became a disciple of Haradatta and gave him rich presents. After some years, the king having expressed his desire that Haradatta should marry the daughter of Supratīka, who was an incarnation of the goddess of fortune, the father offered her to Haradatta in marriage which was solemnized with great pomp and grandeur.

From this legendary story, we can at least sift this much truth, viz., that Haradatta was a Vaiṣṇava by birth and subsequently became a Śaiva and that he was called Sudarśana when he was a Vaiṣṇava. If Haradatta was identical with Sudarśana, does this identity involve the identity of the authors of the commentaries of the Gṛhyasūtra of Āpastamba who are known by the same names? But it is not likely that Haradatta, the Śaiva Brahmin of Kamsapura, should have written Gṛhytātpāryadarśana, when he was five years' old and was known by the name of Sudarśana, and should have written again another commentary on the same Gṛhyasutra after he became a Śaivite. We have moreover to take into consideration the fact that Gṛhyatātparyadarśana of Sudarśana is a later work as it quotes Haradatta. According to Bühler, Haradatta who wrote the commentary on the Āpastambasūtra, lived between 1300 and 1450 and, if the date assigned to Haradatta in Bhaviṣyōttarapurāṇa be correct, he must be a quite different person from the other.

There is a word used in Padamanjarī which very clearly indicates that the author of the work belonged to the Telugu country and was quite a different person from the Śaiva devotee. Speaking of what are the right words in Sanskrit which form the subject-matter of Paṇini and the wrong words which should be excluded from it, Haradatta writes याः पुनर्देशभाषाभिः संज्ञाः कूचिमञ्चीत्यादयो न तासां साधुत्वम् which means, "words such as Kūcimañci which are used in the vernaculars of the country, are not right words." Kūcimañci is a Telugu word and occurs as parts of proper names such as Kūcimañci Thimmanna, a well-known Telugu poet.* If he had been born in the Tamil country as the Śaiva devotee and philosopher was, he would have quoted a Tamil word in illustration of what he wanted to explain. On the strength of this argument, which, though simple, is yet conclusive, we can say that the author of Padamañjari is quite a different person. There is no variety in reading and the word Kūcimañci is seen in the fragmentary edition of the work in "The Pandit" of Benares and in the manuscripts of Southern India which I consulted. The person of whom Bhaviṣyōttarapurāṇa speaks and who was born in Kaṁsapura as the son of Vāsudēva must be the author who wrote the Hariharatāratamyastuti, the Sūktimāla and a work on the Śaiva religion, which is quoted by Mādhava in his Sarvadarśanasaṅgraha.

The following stanzas occur in the portion of Padamañjarī contained in the manuscript copy under notice, in which the author speaks of himself.

एवं प्रकटितो ऽस्माभिः भाष्ये परिचयः परः ।
तस्य निश्शेषतो मन्ये प्रतिपत्तापि दुर्लभः ॥ I, 1—3.

"Thus we have shown our great acquaintance with the Bhāṣya of Patañjali; I think that we cannot find a person who knows the whole work."

प्रक्रियातर्कगहनप्रविष्टो हृष्टमानसः ।
हरदत्तहरिः स्वैरं विहरन् केन वार्यते ॥ I, 1—4.

"Who will oppose the lion of Haradatta who has entered the wilderness of the discussion of grammatical processes and who is joyful and walks about freely?"

From this we have to infer that Haradatta was well-versed in Pāṇini's grammar and was very proud of his scholarship.

He refers to Jayāditya and Vāmana respectively in the following passages:—

प्रयोगाणां तु निर्वाहो णिचश्चेत्यात्मनेपदात् ।
जयादित्यस्य हृदयं गूढमेतत्प्रकाशितम् ॥ I, 3—67.

वामनस्त्वके जीविकार्थे * इत्यत्राक इति किं रमणीयकर्तीति जीविकायां तृचं प्रत्युदाहरिष्यतीति ॥ II, 2—17.

He quotes Amarasiṁha, Gaṇakāra, Piṅgalanāga, Bhaṭṭi, Kālidāsa and Bhāravi and refers to Kuṇi in the following passage:—

तत्र सूत्रार्थप्रधानो ग्रन्थो वृत्तिः। सा चेह पाणिनिप्रणीतानां सूत्राणां कुणिप्रभृतिभिराचार्यैर्विरचितं विवरणम् ॥ कुणिना तु प्राचां ग्रहणं

* VI, 2-73. The above passage is important as showing that Haradatta believed that Vāmana was the author of the commentary of the sixth Adhyāya.

आचार्यनिर्देशार्थं व्याख्यातम् । भाष्यकारोऽपि तथैवाशिश्रयत ॥ I, 1—75.

From this passage, we have to infer that Kuṇi wrote a Vṛtti on Pāṇini which was consulted by Haradatta.

The following stanza is quoted :—

अपनय पादसरोजमङ्कतः
शिथिलय बाहुलतां गलाद्धताम् ।
क च वदनेऽशुकमाकुलीकृतम् (पूर्वपादाः)
वरतनु सम्प्रवदन्ति कुक्कुटा (इति) ॥ I, 3-48.

The fourth line of the stanza is quoted in the Bhaṣya of Patañjali as well as in the Kāśikāvṛtti, and Haradatta has added the remaining three lines.

The stanza is attributed to Kumāradāsa by Kṣēmēndra in his Aucityavicāracarcā and reads there as follows :—

अयि विजहीहि दृढोपगूहनं
त्यज नवसङ्गमभीरु वल्लभे ।
अरुणकरोद्गम एष वर्तते
वरतनु संप्रवदन्ति कुक्कुटाः ॥

Kumāradāsa and his work are referred to in the following verse by Jalhaṇa in his Sūktimuktāvali :—

जानकीहरणं कर्तुं रघुवंशे स्थिते सति ।
कविः कुमारदासश्च रावणश्च यदि क्षमः ॥

"If, when the dynasty of Raghu is in a flourishing condition, there is any one to carry away Jānaki, the wife of Rāma, it is Rāvaṇa; so, if, when the poem Raghuvamśa of Kālidāsa is in existence, there is any one to compose the poem of Jānakīharaṇa it is Kumāradāsa." It is supposed, on the authority of Kṣēmēndra, that the verse quoted in the Mahābhāṣya was taken from the Jānakīharaṇa of Kumāradāsa. Now this poem, which seemed to have been lost altogether, was published by Professor Dharmārāmasthavira, Principal of the Vidyālaṅkāra College of Ceylon, who, in the preface to his edition, says that the poem was reconstructed from a Singalese paraphrase of it. Notwithstanding this circumstance, it seems to be identical in form with that of the original, as some of the passages which I found quoted in other works are found in this book in the same form in which they are quoted. The following episode is given in the preface to the edition of Jānakīharaṇa.

Kumāradāsa, who was the author of Jānakīharaṇa and was king of Ceylon, had a concubine to whose house he frequently went. He had a hemistich in Sanskrit which none of the poets of his court were able to fill up, and it ran as follows :—

कमलात्कमलोत्पत्तिः श्रूयते न च दृश्यते ।

"It is not heard nor seen that a lotus springs from a lotus."

In one of his visits to her house, he wrote the hemistich on a wall of her house. A notice was given that any poet who would complete the verse would receive a rich reward. Kāḷidāsa who was then on a visit to the royal bard whose poem he had seen in India, took lodgings in the house of the woman and happened to see the hemistich on the wall. He completed it in the following way :—

बाले तव मुखाम्भोजे कथमिन्दीवरद्वयम् ॥

"Young damsel! in the lotus of thy face, how two blue lotus flowers?"

The woman to whom the poet probably meant the lines to be a compliment, influenced by the hope of obtaining the promised reward, murdered Kāḷidāsa that very night and concealed his body. When the king visited her on the following day, she demanded the reward promised for filling up the latter part of the verse. But Kumāradāsa, detecting the genius of a great poet in the new lines added, did not believe her and, insisting on her disclosing the real author, came to know that it was Kāḷidāsa whom she murdered. When the corpse of Kāḷidāsa was brought out, the sorrow and consternation of the king was very great. He ordered a grand funeral in honor of the poet and, when the pile was lighted, the monarch overwhelmed with grief, jumped into the fire and died. On refering to a history of Ceylon named "Ceylon, Ancient and Modern," by an Officer late of the Ceylon Rifles, I found a list of the ancient kings of Ceylon in which the name of Kumāradāsa occurs and the time of his reign is mentioned as 513 A.C. He is said to be a king of great learning. The author of the work adds the following remarks. "A poet named Kāḷidāsa having been murdered by a courtezan whose house the king frequented, he sacrificed himself on the funeral pile of the poet." If this account of Kāḷidāsa be true, there must have been a Kāḷidāsa in the sixth century who was a contemporary of Kumāradāsa, King of Ceylon, who flourished in the early part of the sixth century A.C. According to Professor Max-Müller, there was a Kāḷidāsa who was a contemporary of a Buddhist named Diṅnāga who is referred to in the well-known poem Mēghadūta and was a pupil of Asaṅga and that Asaṅga flourished in the time of Vikramāditya in the sixth century. This Kāḷidāsa must be a person who was a contemporary of Kumāradāsa, king of Ceylon. If so, the above quotation in Mahābhāṣya from Jānakīharaṇa must be a later interpolation, because we cannot bring the date of the composition of Mahābhāṣya so late as the sixth century. This view is supported by the fact that the verse is not found in the present edition of Jānakīharaṇa and that the full stanza which is quoted by Kṣēmēndra in his Aucityavicārcārcā is quite different from that which is quoted in the Padamañjarī except the last lines which are indentical.

9. आख्यातचन्द्रिका

Ākhyātacandrikā is a short treatise on verbs written by Bhaṭṭamalla. I have not seen the work noticed in any of the catalogues of Sanskrit manuscripts published in India or elsewhere. The date of the composition of the work is not known; but it is quoted by Mallināthasūri, Kumārasvāmisōmapīthi, son of Mallinātha, Rāmacandra, the commentator of Campurāmāyaṇa, and by Durgādāsa. Of the above authors who quote the Ākhyātacandrikā, Mallinātha is the oldest and flourished in the fourteenth century. The work must, therefore, be referred to the thirteenth century or to an earlier period. It was recast under the name of Kriyākōṣa by one Rāmacandra who retained the greater portion of the original and removed those verbs which are Vēdic, or are not used commonly. This rescension has been printed in Bombay with other similar and shorter treatises. The author of this abridgment was the son of Viśvanātha and was the disciple of Krishna paṇḍita as can be seen from the following extract :—

प्रणम्य पितरौ भक्त्या कृष्णपण्डितशर्मणः ।
गुरूंश्चापि क्रियाकोशं ब्रुवे व्युत्पित्सुसिद्धये ॥

The Ākhyātacandrikā was recast by another author named Kavisāraṅga under the title of Prayuktākhyātamañjarī. It follows closely the arrangement and the outline of the original as can be seen from the following extract :—

इति प्रयुक्ताख्यातमञ्जर्यां तृतीयः काण्डः ॥

The Ākhyātacandrikā consists of three cantos. The first is sub-divided into 1. भावविकारवर्ग, 2. बुद्धिवर्ग, 3. अन्तःकरणवर्ग, and 4. वचनक्रियावर्ग, 5. ध्वनिक्रियावर्ग; the second into 1. ब्रह्म-क्रियावर्ग, 2. क्षत्रक्रियावर्ग, 3. वैश्यक्रियावर्ग, and 4. शूद्रक्रिया-वर्ग; and the third into 1. प्रकीर्णकवर्ग, 2. सनादिवर्ग, 3. नानार्थवर्ग, and 4. आत्मनेपदपरस्मैपदविवेकवर्ग.

The work occupies the same position towards verbs in the Sanskrit language as the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana of Amarasiṁha does towards nouns, adjectives and adverbs.

It mentions all the most commonly used roots in the third person singular, indicative mood, present tense (लट्) grouped into synonyms, and gives the most important causal, nominal, and desiderative forms. Then follow homonymous verbs occurring in the ten conjugations. The work also mentions the verbs which are found only in the Vēdas and not used in the classical Sanskrit as can be seen from the following passage:—

जिरिणोति रिणोत्येव क्षिरिणोति क्षिणोति च ।
दाश्नाति च दृणात्याहुः पदानि छान्दसानि षट् ॥

From the above description, it will be clearly seen that the work will be a very useful guide to the students learning Sanskrit and has a high educational value, in consideration of which I intend editing it with notes and making it accessible to students studying Sanskrit in schools and colleges in this Presidency.

CLASS III.—LEXICON.

10. अभिधानरत्नमाला.

Abhidhānaratnamālā was written by Halāyudha and is often quoted. It was printed by Aufrecht. The author mentions the following lexicographers from whose works he compiled his lexicon: Amaradatta, Vararuci, Bhāguri, Vōpālita. The work is divided like the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana of Amarasiṁha into three kāṇḍas. But the defect of the work is that it does not treat of the genders of words so minutely as Amarasiṁha does. The author of the Kavirahasya, a lexicon of Sanskrit verbs, is also called Halāyudha, and he refers to Kṛṣṇa, a king of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa family who reigned in the beginning of the ninth century and was his patron. Professor Bhandarkar says that the two Halāyudhas were probably the same and gives his reasons for the identity.* I would agree with him and assign the composition of the Abhidhānaratnamālā to the author of the Kavirahasya.

11. टीकासर्वस्वम् नामलिङ्गानुशासनव्याख्यानम्.

Tīkāsarvasva is a commentary on the celebrated Nāmaliṅgānusāsana of Amarasimha by Sarvānanda. His family name seems to have been Vandyaghaṭīya or Vandighaṭīya as can be seen from a passage which has different readings :—

वन्दिघटीयार्तिहरपुत्रः ॥	Two manuscripts of the Library obtained from the Salem District.
वन्द्यघटीयार्तिहरपुत्रः ॥	Another manuscript of the Library written in the Malayālam character and obtained from Malabar.
वन्दिघटीमातुरार्तिहापुत्रः ॥	In a manuscript of the Palace Library of Tanjore noticed in Dr. Burnell's Catalogue.

---

* Vide his report on the search for Sanskrit Manuscripts, 1883-84.

From the first two readings which agree very closely, I should infer that the author's family name was वन्दिघटीय; and my friend Mahāmahōpādhyāya Haraprasada Sastri of Calcutta informs me that the term is connected with the family name Bannerji.—Vide the Notes.

The author says that he was acquainted with ten commentaries written by previous authors, but he does not give their names.

According to the Report * of Dr. Bhandarkar on the search of Sanskrit Manuscripts for the year 1883-84, he is quoted in the Padacandrikā, a commentary of the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana by Rāyamakuṭa who composed the work in 1431 A.D., and the work under review must have been composed before that time. From the list of works and authors quoted in the work we learn that Sarvānanda quotes Subhāṣitāvali of Kāśmīravallabha. This work was printed by Professor † Peterson who says that Vallabhadeva cannot have flourished before Jainōlābhadin whose date is given as 1417-1467 A.D. But as Sarvāṇanda is quoted by Rāyamakuṭa which, as aforesaid, was composed in 1431, we may infer that the Ṭīkāsarvasva must have been composed between 1417 and 1431 A.D.

12. लिङ्गाभट्टीयम्.

Liṅgābhaṭṭīya is a commentary on the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana of Amara by Liṅgābhaṭṭa and his name is variously spelt. It is the latest of the commentaries on the lexicon and is most copious and useful. Our manuscript contains the commentary only for the third kāṇḍa, and it is highly desirable that the remaining portion of the work should be obtained and copied. The commentator has fully consulted the Tīkāsarvasva of Sarvānanda, who says that he studied ten commentaries before composing his commentary.

13. त्रिकाण्डशेषः

Trikāṇḍaśēṣa is a lexicon composed by Puruṣōttama as a supplement to the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana of Amarasiṁha containing the words which do not occur in the latter. It is divided into three parts corresponding to the three parts of the original and every part is again divided into as many vargas as in the original. The present manuscript contains the third kāṇḍa only. According to Colebrooke, Purusōttama is the author of the Hārāvalī also in which he says that the work was shown to the pandit Janamējaya, and Dhṛtisiṁha who seems to have been the author's patron.

The colophons of both the works agree and run as follow:—

"इति श्रीपुरुषोत्तमदेवरचितः त्रिकाण्डशेषाभिधानकोशः समाप्तः" ॥

"इति श्रीमहामहोपाध्यायपुरुषोत्तमदेवप्रणीता हारावली पर्यवसिता" ॥

The title of the Mahāmahōpādhyāya might have been conferred on him after he came under the patronage of the king Dhṛtisiṁha, and the Hārāvalī, composed after he got the title.

He mentions in the Hārāvalī the following lexicons:—the Śabdārṇava, Utpalinī and Samsārāvarta; and the stanza in which they are referred to, seems to contain the names of the authors of those lexicons.

शब्दार्णव उत्पलिनी संसारावर्त इत्यपि ।
कोशा वाचस्पतिव्याडिविक्रमादित्यनिर्मिताः ॥

"Śabdārṇava, Utpalinī and Samsārāvarta are lexicons composed by Vācaspati, Vyāḍi and Vikramāditya respectively."

14. नानार्थरत्नमाला.

Nānārtharatnamālā.—This is a lexicon of homonymous words composed by Irugapadaṇḍādhinātha, who was the general of the king Harihara who flourished in the fourteenth century. In the Ulvar catalogue the author is wrongly termed Mirugapadaṇḍādhinātha. The name Bhāskara is added in the colophon which is given under extracts printed at the end of that catalogue.

ग्रथ्नाति रम्यां नानार्थरत्नमालां गुणोज्ज्वलाम् ।
भास्करः कृतिनां मान्यो नात्यल्पां नातिविस्तराम् ॥

इति जगदुपकारिण्यां मिरुगपदण्डाधिनाथविरचितायां ।
अव्ययपदकाण्डोऽयं संपूर्णो नानार्थरत्नमालायाम् ॥

(In the last line one long syllable is redundant; and the error may be rectified by the omission of सम्).

From the mention of the name of Bhāskara, it would appear that a pandit of the name of Bhāskara composed the lexicon under the patronage of the army-leader named Irugapa who flourished under the king Harihara; and the name of the author might have been omitted owing to the mistake of the scribes who at different times made transcripts of the work. I must also state here that the king Harihara had a brother named Bhāskara, who did not succeed to the throne, as it passed to his elder brother and from him to his son Deva Raya I. Was the work fathered on Bhāskara by the author as a mark of honour? It often happens that when one of the sons of a king succeeds to the throne of his father, the other sons devote themselves to learning and patronage of learned men. Inscriptions issued by Bhāskara are mentioned in Sewell's "List of Antiq.", Vol. II.

The lexicon is divided into six kāṇḍās:—(1) Ekākṣarakāṇḍa, (2) Dvyakṣarakāṇḍa, (3) Tryakṣarakāṇḍa, (4) Caturakṣarakāṇḍa, (5) Saṅkīrṇakāṇḍa and (6) Avyayakāṇḍa.

It is an excellent work and is more useful and complete than the Viśvaprakāśa and many other similar works, excepting Mēdinīkārakōśa. It has been printed in Madras several times.

15. मेदिनीकोशः.

Mēdinīkōśa.—This is a lexicon of homonymous words, written by Mēdinīkara, son of Prāṇakara. It is very copious containing all the words arranged according to their final letters as Kānta, Khānta, &c.; and each of these groups is arranged according to the number of syllables, as monosyllables, dissyllables, trisyllables, &c.; and again according to the order of the initial letters. Of all the works of the kind I have seen, this is the best. The author gives a list of lexicographers* and other authors, whom he has consulted, and very rightly condemns the Viśvaprakāśa of Mahēśvara which he includes in the list, as a work of many defects in the following passage:—अपि बहुदोषं विश्वप्रकाशकोषं च सुविचार्य ।

From the passage quoted in the foot-note we learn that the author was Medinīkara who was the son of Prāṇakara and that he was celebrated for his षट्शतगाथाकोष, which seems to be a work like Hāla's Saptaśatī which originally contained 700 Prākrit verses and subsequently augmented to contain between 1,000 and 1,200 verses. It is, however, very curious that the author of the lexicon under report who gives a comprehensive list of lexicographers and also other works he consulted should omit the name of Vaijayantī composed by Yādavaprakāśa which is a well-known lexicon and quoted in many works.

The stanzas are quoted fully by Śrī Ramanātha Vidyāvācaspati in the Trikāṇḍa Vivēka, a commentary on the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana and appear in the extracts made by Professor Eggeling in his Catalogue of the Sanskrit Manuscripts of the Library of the India office, Part II. In these extracts, the name, वाभट represents the fuller form वाग्भट of which it is a vernacular corruption. Compare the form वाभट with वागद् another corruption of the word वाग्भट given in the notice under Kavikalpalatā.

16. विश्वप्रकाशो विश्वो वा.

Viśvaprakāśa or Viśva.—This is a lexicon written by Mahēśvara who calls himself the most excellent of medical doctors, the abode of the knowledge of the whole literature. There is another copy in the library which was purchased by me in 1872; and, in the beginning of this manuscript, some stanzas occur which are found also in the extracts given in the Catalogue of Prof. Aufrecht; and they are quoted here on account of the information they give about the author's ancestry.

From the above stanzas, we learn the following :—There was a person named Haricandra who was the confidential doctor at the court of the king Sāhasāṅka and wrote a commentary on Caraka. In the family was born a famous doctor named Śrīkṛṣṇa who was the best of all the doctors and who was under the king of Gādhipura as the Aśvins were under Indra. His son was Dāmōdara who conquered all his opponents in debate, was well versed in the three-fold dialectics and was the best of doctors. His son was Malhana who was a great scholar. His nephew was Kēśava who mastered all the books on medicine and wrote works on many branches of literature. His son was Śrībrahma who was very learned. His son was Mahēśvara who was prosperous and was known as a great poet. He was well acquainted with all branches of literature and was particularly versed in grammar. He composed Sāhasāṅkacaritra and other great poems; and was proficient in the three branches of the medical science. The following writers on grammar and lexicography are referred to in the beginning of the Viśvaprakāśa: Bhōgīndra, Kātyāyana, Sāhasāṅka, Vācaspati, Vyāḍi, Viśvarūpa, Amara, Maṅgala, Śubhāṅga, Vōpālita, Bhāguri.

The following stanza occurs in a lithograph edition of the work which is in my possession :—

रामानलव्योमरूपैः शककालेऽभिलक्षिते । कोशं विश्वप्रकाशाख्यं निरमाच्छ्रीमहेश्वरः ॥ and is given also in the Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts edited by Dr. Eggeling, Part II, page 282, in the Cat. Cod. From the stanza we learn that the work was written in Śaka 1133.

Whatever may be the boast of the author about the merit of the lexicon, the work has one defect, namely, that the genders of the words whose meanings are given are not mentioned, and the words are not properly arranged. These are the defects which were carefully avoided in the Mēdinīkōśa; and the author of that work very fitly condemns the Viśvaprakāśa (vide the notice on Mēdinīkōśa).

CLASS IV (a).—POETRY (KĀVYA).

17. अमरुशतकम्.

Amaruśataka.—A centum of verses attributed to a person named Amaru, which word seems to be a contraction of a fuller name. There is a tradition known to all the pandits of Southern India from which we learn the following. Śaṅkarācārya, the celebrated commentator of the Śārīrakasūtra, in the course of his victorious march through the country, went to Benares and vanquished Maṇḍanamiśra who was maintaining the necessity of performing the Vedic ceremonies throughout the life of a Brahmin. He and his wife were considered to be the incarnations of the creator Brahma and his wife Sarasvatī, the goddess of speech. After the defeat of her husband, the goddess of speech challenged Śaṅkarācārya to a debate, and, when she found the opponent superior to her in every branch of knowledge, she thought she could win him in the art of love, as he became a recluse without marrying and leading the life of a householder. But Śaṅkarācārya asked permission to enter upon the debate after some time; and the goddess of speech consented. He returned home and asked his disciples to guard his body for some time during which, he said, it would remain lifeless. He then separated himself from the body and entered the dead body of a king named Amaru who had just then died and whose body had not yet been burnt. The friends and relatives of the king seeing that the dead body became alive again, rejoiced very much and returned home with the king. The wife and women of his harem were much pleased with the event and thought the king himself was resuscitated by divine power. Śaṅkarācārya lived in the new body for about a year during which he acquired great proficiency in the art of love. He suddenly quit the body of Amaru and entered again his lifeless body carefully guarded by his disciples. He then went to Sarasvatī and began a debate with her on a most abstruse point of the art of love and thoroughly vanquished her. The work under report is said to have been composed by Śaṅkarā cārya, when he lived in the body of Amaru; and hence it is attributed to the latter. The story is too childish and ridiculous to be believed and, if it can prove anything at all, it may at most show that the author of the poem and the celebrated philosopher might be contemporaries. The śataka of Amaru is quoted by Ānandavardhana who flourished under the reign of Avantivarma of Kāshmere (855–884 A.D.); hence the author must have lived before that period. As Śaṅkarācārya's date is fixed about the end of the eighth century A.D., the poet might have been a contemporary of the philosopher or might have flourished a little before him. Dr. Peterson quotes the following passage from a commentary of the śataka:—

विश्वप्रख्यातनाडिन्धमकुलतिलको विश्वकर्मा द्वितीयः ॥ from which we understand that the author belonged to the goldsmith's class.

18. अमरुशतकव्याख्या.

Amaruśatakavyākhyā, called Śṛṅgāradīpikā, a commentary written by a king of the Telugu country named Vēmabhūpāla, who, according to the colophon, had the title of Vīranārāyaṇa and was well versed in all the branches of learning.

19. कप्फणाभ्युदयम्.

Kapphaṇābhyudaya.—This is a very rare poem not mentioned in any of the catalogues I have seen. It is written in the Uriya character and is not mentioned in the manuscript catalogue of the Library. Its existence was not known; and it was considered an Uriya work. When the Alphabetical Index of the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library was prepared, all the Sanscrit manuscripts in the Uriya character were examined by an Uriya pandit who found out the real name of the work and entered it in the catalogue. Soon after I took charge of the Curatorship of the Library, I found the name of the manuscript in the Alphabetical Index; and as I had already been familiar with the name of the book from the quotations from it found in some commentaries on the Nāmaliṅgānuśāsana of Amarasiṁha, I thought that the work should be a great poem much appreciated in ancient times. I engaged an Uriya man to copy the poem in Telugu character; but, owing to his ignorance of Sanskrit, the transcript is very imperfect and requires a careful collation and correction. The author calls himself Bhattaśivasvāmi and is identical with the poet who is quoted in Subhāṣitāvali of Vallabhadēva published by Dr. Peterson.

He was one of the poets of the court of Avantivarma Mahārāja of Kashmere who reigned (855–884 A.D.).

The poem is a mahākāvya like the Raghuvaṁśa, the Kirātārjunīya, the Śiśupālavadha and others; and, in its diction, description and style, it is like the Siśupālavadha and contains twenty sargas or chapters. The following are their contents:—

1st Sarga. Description of the town Līlāvatī and its king Kapphaṇa.
2nd ,, Account given by the king's spy of the countries visited by him.
3rd ,, Agitation of the kings of the court.
4th ,, A council of war.
5th ,, Sending of a messenger.
6th ,, Expedition of the king and description of the Malaya mountain.

7th Sarga. Encampment of the army.
8th „ Description of the different seasons in the mountain.
9th „ Bathing amusement of the king and his courtiers and officers.
10th „ Culling flowers in gardens.
11th „ Description of the setting of the sun.
12th „ Description of the rising of the moon.
13th „ Drinking.
14th „ Union of lovers.
15th „ Description of the last part of the night and the daybreak.
16th „ March of the army.
17th, 18th, 19th „ Description of the battle.
20th „ Conclusion.

The following is a short account of the story of the Kapphaṇābhyudaya as can be gathered from the manuscript which is imperfect and full of errors. Kapphaṇa was a great king, ruling over the Dakshiṇāpatha, conquered all his enemies and governed his kingdom powerfully. He had sent to foreign countries many spies to watch the proceedings of his vassal kings and enemies. One of those spies returned from the northern countries whither he had been sent. The spy informed the king that he had visited many countries, that their rulers were very loyal to the king, and that Prasēnajit, king of Kōsaladēśa, who was well versed in politics, governed his people with kindness and justice, routed his enemies and reduced them to subjection and thus became very proud, disrespected the king Kapphaṇa The spy requested the king to invade the enemy's capital Śrāvasti and to put down his pride. (2nd sarga.) When the news was communicated to the court, great indignation was felt by the whole audience; and the vassal kings assembled there, on hearing the news, were much enraged at the disobedience of Prasēnajit. The following are the names of the kings who attended the court of Kapphaṇa:—Jiṣṇu, Suśarma, Vidāma, Pāṇḍya, Surāṣṭra, Sukētu, Bhīṣma, Kirmīra, Āndhrabhīma, Samudrāṅga, Ambarīṣa, Jambha, Ugrasēna, Rukmi, Sauvalka, Kauravya, Duṣṣēṇa. (3rd sarga.)

Then the members of the court waited for the orders of the king. The king gave an account of his army and its various divisions, the chariots, the elephants, the horses, &c., and described the plan of the offensive operations against the enemy. Having heard the intention of the king, Jambha, Ambarīṣa, Pradyōta, Prōta, Pāṇḍya and other kings expressed their desire of the war with a loud shout (4th sarga). Subāhu, one of the vassals, expressed his opinion as to what ought to be done and enlarged upon the duties of the king. The proposal of the king was highly approved by Śatadhvaja, Bhīmadhanva, Rukmi, Bhīma and others who expressed very vehemently their love of war. Bhīṣmaka, another vassal, gave an estimate of the force of his enemy and of the king and his party and showed the possibility of putting down the power of the enemy. After hearing the speeches, the king sent a messenger, named Dharmaka to inform Prasēnajit of the intended invasion of his country. A Vidyādhara, named Vicitrabāhu, who was a friend of the king and was living in the western ghats went to the king and, informing him of the hostile attitude of his enemy, promised to help him. He invited the king to go to the Malaya mountain with him, and to concert the plan of the expedition. The king consented to his proposal and followed him with his wife, children and army to the Malaya mountain. (5th sarga.)

His friend described the beauty of the mountain and showed many interesting scenes and at last led him to the sea-coast and the neighbouring islands covered with heaps of bones of the Nāgas eaten by Garuḍa. The poet here introduces all sorts of verbal ornaments (शब्दालङ्कार) as are seen in the fourth chapter of Śiśupālavadha and the fifth chapter of Kirātārjunīya. The description of the bones of the Nāgas heaped in the sea-shore beyond the Malaya mountain resembles that given in the Nāgānanda Nāṭaka. (6th sarga.)

The whole army was encamped on a tableland on the summit of the mountain. The king's family, the soldiers, the horses, the elephants and other divisions of the army were lodged in different places according to their comforts and conveniences. (7th sarga.)

'All the seasons appeared on the mountain simultaneously,* the climate becoming very pleasant and enjoyable. The king with his retinue stayed there and spent some time happily. (8th sarga.)

The king accompanied by his wives, courtiers, leaders of armies and other noblemen with their followers amused themselves with culling flowers and other pastimes. (9th sarga.)

They bathed to remove the fatigue of gathering flowers and garden excursions. (10th sarga.)

After the king and his followers had finished their bath, the sun began to set. Then follows a description of the sunset and the rise of the moon. (11th sarga.)

After the rising of the moon, every woman dressed and adorned herself suitably, and sent for her maid servants, with whom she held an erotic conversation. Messengers were sent by women to their consorts. The lovers were united and spent the night pleasantly. (12th, 13th and 14th sargas)

In the fifteenth sarga, the poet describes the latter part of the night and the daybreak. In the sixteenth the kings, after some negotiation and counsel, prepare for the battle. In the seventeenth, eighteenth and the nineteenth sargas, the battle is described by the poet who introduces a variety of verbal beauties such as yamakas and bandhas. In the last sarga, Kapphaṇa, acquiring a religious turn of mind becomes a pious follower of Buddha.

As the transcript of the original Uriya manuscript is, as I stated already, full of errors, I have not attempted to give a more detailed account of the story of Kapphaṇābhyudaya. At the end of the manuscript, there are three stanzas in which the author mentions his own name and refers to a Buddhistic teacher named Candramitra whose disciple he was. There is no doubt that the author was a Buddhist. He prays to Buddha under the name Daśabala in the very first invocatory stanza and treats of the hero of the poem as a Buddhistic king. He selects for the hero Kapphaṇa the king of Dakṣiṇāpatha, that is, the country lying to the south of the Narmada referred to in the Periplus under the name of

* Vide the first stanza of the sixth chapter of the Māgha.

Dākhinabades and known to the Chinese under the name of Ta-Thsin and seems to have included a good deal of the Bombay and the Mahratta countries and the northern Konkan. It did not comprise the countries of the Pallava, Chera, Chōla and Pāṇḍya kings, the last of whom however is mentioned as a vassal of Kapphaṇa. His enemy was Prasēnajit, king of the Kōsala country whose capital was Śrāvasti. These kings are referred to in the Buddhistic legends and were not historical personages. The following stories are given in Dr. R. Mitra's "Nepalese Buddhistic Literature" on page 38 from the Avadānaśataka.

"Kapphiṇa, the young king of Dakṣiṇāpatha, had 18,000 young courtiers. Proud of this strong body of supporters, he insolently commanded the lords of the six cities, Śrāvasti, &c., to appear before him. They, in alarm, took refuge with the lord. The lord, in the following terms, challenged Kapphiṇa to come and fight. 'If you are standing, do not sit; come with as much speed as you can.' By wafting his magic wand aloft, he suddenly brought into existence an innumerable array of veterans of which he took the lead in royal robes. But when Kapphiṇa was about to engage, a voice from heaven declared 'Obey the command of Buddha,' and he changed his mind. The lord instructed him in the Bōdhi knowledge and raised him to the rank of an Arhat when he departed from this world."

"The lord said, 'a merchant of Bandhumati feasted lord Vipasyi and founded a vihāra for him in the 71st mundane period. This very man in his other existence as Brahmadatta, king of Benares, gave a wholesome diet to a Pratyaka Buddha who was ill, and raised a stūpa to his honor. For these merits, he obtained Arhatship when living as Kapphiṇa, king of Dakṣiṇāpatha.'"

Prasēnajit, king of the Kōsala country, had Śrāvasti for his capital and is referred to in many of the stories in the "Nepalese Buddhistic Literature" above referred to. But in none of them he is mentioned as the enemy of Kapphaṇa. In all the stories he is represented as a pious Buddhist; and this accounts for the favourable accounts given by Dharmaka the spy to the king Kapphaṇa and the good opinion entertained by the spy regarding the king of Śrāvasti. The name of Prasēnajit is mentioned also in a short list of kings beginning with Bimbisara as the ninth lineal descendant just preceding Nanda.

The following stanzas which are quoted in Vallabhadēva's Subhāṣitāvali and Śārṅgadharapaddhati have been verified in the Kapphaṇābhyudaya :—

20. कृष्णकर्णामृतम्.

Kṛṣṇakarṇāmṛta.—The work was written by Vilvamaṅgala who was latterly called also Līlāśuka, and contains three parts, each consisting of one hundred and odd stanzas. The work is written in praise of god Kṛṣṇa whose devotee the author was. There is a tradition among the Sanskrit pandits which runs to the following effect: Līlāśuka had a concubine, named Cintāmaṇi, of whom he was very fond. One day, after making the annual ceremony of his deceased father, he took some cakes prepared for the ceremony and went to the house of his paramour. But, as she knew that he had performed the annual ceremony of his father, she thought that he should not pollute himself by coming to her house and associating with her. She, therefore, did not open the door to him. But the Brahmin went to the backyard and, ascending the wall, jumped into the house and approached her. But the virtuous Cintāmaṇi pitied her lover and, having disfigured her person with ashes and mud to make it look horrible, appeared before him and said to him: "If you love your god Kṛṣna as much as you love me, you will be liberated from all the troubles of this world and will attain salvation." When he saw her, he was much disgusted with the ugly appearance of her person, and at once gave up all his passion for her and became a recluse by her advice. He prostrated himself at her feet and said; "you are my first preceptor. I shall henceforth be devoted to the worship of Kṛṣṇa." He then went to a Yati (ascetic) named Sōmagiri whose disciple he became and who taught him a mantra of the god Kṛṣṇa. He worshipped the god with such piety that the god appeared before him and promised him the boon he wanted. The god also informed the devotee that, notwithstanding his goodness and piety, he will attain salvation not in that birth but in a third birth. Accordingly he was, after his death, born as Jayadēvakavi and, having been devoted to the worship of the same god, composed the Gītagōvinda and, in the third birth, he was born as Nārāyaṇatīrtha who was attached to the same god Kṛṣṇa and composed a work called Kṛṣṇalīlātaraṅgiṇī. In this birth, he obtained the heavenly bliss from the god. The whole story is purely legendary; and the only truth it may embody, may be that Līlāśuka lived before Jayadēva and the latter before Nārāyanatīrtha. Prof. Aufrecht quotes a long passage from a commentary on the Karṇāmṛta which corroborates the above account of the events of the life of Līlāśuka.

21. कृष्णकर्णामृतव्याख्या.

Kṛṣṇakarṇāmṛtavyākhyā is a commentary on the above by Pāpayallayasūri who was born in the family of Pusupāṭi. He refers to a hermit named Yajñēśa who performed the sacrifice called Vājapēya and also to an ascetic named Mukunda who seems to have been his preceptor. He says that the commentary written by him should be perused by those who are well versed in the Mantraśāstra, Mahābhāṣya, Maṇi (sc. ?), the Pūrvamīmāṁsa and the Uttaramīmaṁsa. He does not aspire, he says, to such a fame as was acquired by Peddibhaṭṭa, that is Mallinātha, who wrote commentaries on many poems. He wrote the commentary simply with a view to get opportunities of thinking of the god Kṛṣṇa. He is not certain about the meanings of the words Cintāmaṇi and Sōmagiri which occur in the first stanza. He says that Cintāmaṇi may be a mantra and quotes a passage from the Naiṣadhīyacarita, तच्चिन्तामणिमन्त्रचिन्तनफले, where the word Cintāmaṇi is used in the sense of a mantra. He then proposes another meaning and says that the word may refer to a sage who was of that name and who was the preceptor of Līlāśuka. A third meaning is given in its reference to a woman called Cintāmaṇi whose heart was pure owing to the favour of the god Śiva who was worshipped at Chicacole (श्रीकाकुलेश्वर). If this be true, it will lead to the inference that Līlāśuka was a native of Chicacole. The commentator goes on with his further conjectural meanings as follows: The word may be taken in the sense of the all-giving philosopher's stone and the other word Sōmagiri may refer to the woman whom he loved. If Cintāmaṇi be taken as an epithet to Sōmagiri, it would mean that she gave everything the poet wanted, that is, she became the source of the spiritual advantage which the poet secured in after-life; or the word Sōmagiri[9] may refer to the poet's preceptor and, as he gave to his disciple everything he wanted spiritually, he was compared to the philosopher's stone. The commentator first started with a conjecture with regard to the word Sōmagiri which was supported by tradition and other sources and he may stop there; but when he goes further and says that Sōmagiri may also be taken to refer to the poet's paramour, we should think he is running amuck with the meaning of the word. As the commentator speaks of Mallinātha who flourished in the fourteenth century, he must have lived in a later age.

22. गीतगोविन्दम् व्याख्यानसहितम्.

Gītagōvinda with Commentary.—The original was written by Jayadēva, one of the court poets of Lakṣmaṇasēna, a king of Bengal, who issued an inscription in A.D. 1116. The other poets were Gōvardhana, Umāpati and Śaraṇa. In the following verse which occurs in the work under notice, the author alludes to his contemporary poets:—

वाचः पल्लवयत्युमापतिधरः सन्दर्भशुद्धिं गिरां
जानीते जयदेव एव शरणः श्लाघ्यो दुरूहाद्दते ।
शृङ्गारोत्तरसत्प्रमेयरचनैराचार्यगोवर्धन–
स्पर्धीकोऽपि न विश्रुतः श्रुतधरो धोयी कविक्ष्मापतिः ॥

"Umāpatidhara causes his speech to shoot out like the leaves of a tree; only Jayadēva knows the purity of composition; Śaraṇā is commendable and is free from bad thoughts. There are none to compete with Gōvardhana in composing excellent works abounding in the sentiment of love; Śrutadhara is well known; Dhōyī is the prince of poets."

The poets Dhōyī and Gōvardhana are referred to by extracts made from their works in the Śarṅgadharapaddhati.

Jayadēva was the son of Bhōjadēva and Vāmādēvī. His wife was Padmāvatī. He was native of a village called Tindubilva* * तिन्दुबिल्वसमुद्रसंभव, the moon of the ocean of the village of Tindubilva. 7th Aṣṭapadi.

which was situated on the river Ajaya in the Vīrabhúmi district of Bengal. The commentator, however, says that the poet belonged to Ghūrjara (Guzerat), in the following passage, but we have no authority for this statement :—

गुज्जरीरागेण गीयते तस्यायमभिप्रायः । जयदेवकवेर्घूर्जरदेशत्वात्तद्देशस्थानां तस्याः प्रियत्वात् पुनरपिगुज्जरीराग उपक्षिप्त इति अवगन्तव्यम् ॥

"It is to be sung in the Gujjarī melody, and the author's intention is the following: As Jayadēvakavi belonged to the country of Guzerat and the people of that country are fond of that melody, it is introduced again."

He was a devotee of Kṛṣṇa whom he worshipped by singing the god's praise before an idol of the god and allowing his wife to dance in accompaniment of the songs.

The work is divided into twelve sargas, and each contains twenty-four aṣṭapadīs or songs of eight feet each. Each aṣṭapadī begins with a chorus followed by eight feet at the end of each of which the chorus is repeated. It is sung in a particular melody and time, which are mentioned in the beginning. The following are the melodies :—

The manuscript is incomplete and ends with the greater part of the 22nd aṣṭapadī.

The Gītagōvinda is one of the few works * which have come down to us from a remote antiquity and give us some insight into the music of ancient India. The knowledge that we may obtain from it cannot, however, be much, owing to the absence of a thorough system of notation, as is the case with the modern western music. The reference to the melody and time to be used in singing each passage, gives us some knowledge of the mode of singing it. The songs are sung differently in different countries, but originally the poet must have sung them in particular ways and taught them to others; and, as usual, he inserted in the beginning of each song the names of particular melodies and times with which the songs must be sung. When the manuscript of the book was transmitted to other countries, the modes of singing those melodies which the author adopted were forgotten; and new modes were used in their places. In some countries, even these melodies are forgotten and are again changed. In manuscripts, however, they are fixed, and this is owing to the existence of a commentary in which they are mentioned and explained. The melody gives the key-note and the other notes in the gamut, which are used in the song. Thus, for instance, the melody for the first aṣṭapadī is Māḷava the notes of which are C, D, flat, E, F, G, A, flat, and B, with C as the key-note.

The commentary under notice was written by Lakṣmaṇa or Lakṣmīdhara, son of Yajñēśvara, who married two wives, Sarvāmbā and Ambikāmbā, and had four sons of whom the eldest was Koṇḍubhaṭṭōpādhyāya, and the second, Lakṣmīdhara, the author of the work under notice. His grandfather was Timmayasōmayājī. He was a native of the Telugu country in the Krishna district and belonged to the Cherukūru family and was of the Kāśyapagōtra. The members of the family were rich and learned for seven generations. He wrote, besides the commentary of the Śrutirāñjanī which is under notice, the Ṣaḍbhāṣīcandrikā, Svaramañjarī, Prasannarāghavavyākhyā, to which last he refers in the present work in the following passage :—

"उदात्तादिलक्षणं तु अस्मत्कृतप्रसन्नराघवव्याख्याने उपपादितम्" ॥

The drama Prasannarāghava was composed in the early part of the 16th century and the commentator Lakṣmīdhara must belong to a later period.

He refers to a poem of his in his commentary and quotes a verse from it. He says :— "उक्तं च ममैव काव्ये ।

किं मण्डनैः किं रमणीयवस्त्रैः
किं माल्यतांबूलसुगन्धभूषणैः ।
विना प्रियामात्ममनोऽनुकूलां
पुंभोगसारा हि मृगायताक्ष्यः ॥

There were many other commentaries written on the Gītagōvinda, one of which is named Śaśilēkha, and was written by Maithila Kṛṣṇadatta. 'A very peculiar feature of this commentary is the attempt of the author to make the meaning of each passage refer to Śiva. (Vide page 37, Ulvar Catalogue, of Dr. Peterson.)

He was the same person who wrote the commentary of the Anargharāghava as can be seen from the passage which appears in the extract under the Anargharāghava and of which the second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth stanzas occur also in the extracts made under the name of the commentary of the work under notice.

Dr. Burnell notices two works named Alaṅkārarāghava and Alaṅkārasūryōdaya by Yajñēśvaradīkṣita, son of Cherukūri Koṇḍubhaṭṭōpādhyāya. This Yajnēśvaradīkṣita must have been the nephew of the author of the Śrutirāñjanī, of whom I am now writing as the Koṇḍubhaṭṭōpādhyāya of the same family is referred to by Dr. Burnell as the father of the author.

24. अनर्घराघवम्.

Anargharāghava.—A drama in seven acts composed by Murāri who, according to a passage occurring in the beginning of the work, was the son of Bhaṭṭa Vardhamāna and Tantumatīdēvī and was of the Maudgalyagōtra. He is quoted by Ratnākara in his Harivijaya, and the latter poet, according to Rājataraṅgiṇī, flourished at the court of Avantivarma (855–884 A.D.). Murāri is also known by the title of Bālavālmīki (young Vālmīki). In the introduction it is said that the audience were terrified by the representation of a play which was full of the sentiments of anger, disgust and terror, and that Anargharāghava was to be acted to remove the unpleasant feelings of the audience. Bhavabhūti lived in the first half of the eighth century, and Ratnākara who was a later poet than Murāri, in the latter half of the ninth century; and, if Murāri lived in the latter half of the eighth century, he might be later than Bhavabhūti. If this supposition be true, the above reference to a bad play abounding with sentiments of anger, disgust and terror might be very likely to Bhavabhūti's Mālatīmādhava in which such horrible characters as Aghōraghaṇṭa, Kapālakuṇḍalā and the most disgusting and frightful scenes are frequently introduced.

---

* Vide the Extracts.

There is a well-known stanza in which it is said that, while other poets acquired the art of poetry by the favour of the goddess of speech, Murāri learnt everything from his teacher with great pains and industry. The stanza occurs in the Alaṅkārasarvasva of Maṅkhuka and also in the Kuvalayānanda of Appayadīkṣita. It is as follows:—

देवीं वाचमुपासते हि बहवः सारं तु सारस्वतं
जानीते नितरामसौ गुरुकुलक्लिष्टो मुरारिः कविः ।
अब्धिर्लङ्घित एव वानरभटैः किन्त्वस्य गम्भीरता—
मापातालनिमग्नपीवरतनुर्जानाति मन्थाचलः ॥

"Many, indeed, worship the goddess of speech; but Murāri who served hard in his teacher's house knows the essence of learning. The monkey warriors jumped over the sea indeed; but only the Mandara mountain, whose gigantic body is buried in the sea up to the nether-world, knows the depth of the sea."

25. अनर्घराघवव्याख्या.

Anargharāghavavyākhyā.—A commentary on the drama Anargharāghava of Murāri written by Lakṣmīdhara who wrote also the commentāry of Gītagōvinda which was already noticed. The extract quoted from the colophon of the latter contains the same historical matter which is given in the passages extracted from the commentary of the Anargharāghava. It is also said in these extracts that Lakṣmīdhara, after leading a married life for a long time, travelled to different countries, conquered his opponents and, having resigned all the cares of the world, became a Yati with the name of Rāmānanda under a preceptor called Kriṣṇāśrama. He wrote the commentary on the Anargharāghava to please the pandits, and, from this, we may infer that he was a devotee of Rāma even in the last stage of his life. (Vide Extract.)

26. प्रबोधचन्द्रोदयम्.

Prabōdhacandrōdaya.—A philosophical drama in six acts, treating of the different sects of religions and showing the Advaita philosophy as the best and the most successful. According to Goldstücker, the author flourished about the end of the twelfth century. There is a commentary on it named Candrikā the author of which flourished in the reign of Kṛṣṇadēvarāya 1508 to 1530 A.D. The author of the Prabōdhacandrōdaya refers to a king Gōpāla whose friend Kīrtivarman was another king. The former was very powerful and strong, and attacked and defeated his enemies with sword in his hand and reinstated his friend Kīrtivarman in his sovereignty. According to the Mahoba inscription, the king Kīrtivarman here referred to was a Chandella king who with his general Gōpāla defeated Karṇa, king of Cēdi. There is, however, some difference between the accounts given in the prologue of the drama and that given in the inscription. Kīrtivarman is mentioned as the friend of Gōpāla in the drama, whereas in the inscription, the latter is said to have been the general of Kīrtivarman. In imitation of this drama, Vēṅkaṭanātha wrote a philosophical drama in ten acts, called Saṅkalpasūryōdaya establishing the Viśiṣṭādvaita.

27. प्रसन्नराघवम्.

Prasannarāghava.—A drama in seven acts composed by Jayadēva who was the son of Mahādēva and Sumitra and belonged to the Kauṇḍinya gōtra. He was a devotee of Rāma and was deeply versed in the Śrautas and the Śāstras and had the titles of Pīyūṣavarṣa in reference to his sweet poetical composition, and Pakṣadhara in reference to the fact of his having studied logic, once in each fortnight. He was the pupil of Harimiśra and was also known by the long name of Jayadēvatarkālaṅkāramiśra Mahāmahōpādhyāya. He seems to have been a native of Northern India, and, according to Dr. Peterson, lived in Vidarbha. He calls himself a great logician and, from this fact it is generally understood that he was the same as the author of a work called Maṇyālōka. He also wrote the Candrālōka, a treatise on poetics, the fifth chapter of which treating of the figures of speech was slightly modified and was commented upon by Appayyadīkṣita in a work called Kuvalayānanda which is well known in Southern India. According to Dr. Peterson, he also wrote a work called Śilāvihāra. He refers to the following poets, Cōra, that is, Bilhaṇa, Mayūra, Bhāsa, Kālidāsa, Harṣa and Bāṇa.

In the introduction, it is said that the manager had a brother named Guṇārāma; that he objected to being called भरताधिराज 'prince of players' owing to the fact that his elder brother was living; that the title should be conferred on the latter; that he wrote a drama called Haracāpārōpaṇa which was acted at the court of a king called Ratijanaka and obtained a great fame as an actor. A contemptible player stealthily assumed the title of Guṇārāma and misappropriated the fame to himself. Having heard this, the real Guṇārāma went to the south and secured the alliance of a singer named Sukaṇṭha and began to fight against his enemy at the courts of the kings of Southern India.

While we can clearly see in the above statements, an allusion to the story of Rāvaṇa carrying Sītā, the wife of Rāma, and the latter allying himself with the monkey leader, Sugrīvā and fighting with Rāvaṇa to recover his wife, we cannot help thinking of the probability of a reference to Appayyadīkṣita's modification of the Candrālōka and commenting upon the work. Jayadēva might have considered this to be a plagiarism and resorted perhaps to the courts of a king of Southern India where Appayyadīkṣita was living to expose the plagiarism before the king and the people assembled.

Lakṣmīdhara who wrote commentaries on the Gītagōvinda and the Anargharāghava wrote one also on the Prasannarāghava, according to his own statement in his commentary on the Gītagōvinda, उदात्तादिलक्षणं तु अस्मत्कृतप्रसन्नराघवव्याख्याने द्रष्टव्यम् ॥

28. मालतीमाधवम्.

Mālatīmādhava.—This is a well-known drama of Bhavabhūti who flourished in the first half of the eighth century. It consists of ten acts. It is the longest of the works written by the author and is the most difficult of his three dramas. The author, who was a great scholar, well versed in many branches of learning, shows his knowledge in this work. It is said, in the beginning, that the drama was represented at the festivities of Kālapriyanātha of Ujjain. His own relatives and friends who admired his great learning and devotion to the Vēdas and the performance of Yagas and other ceremonies prescribed in the Vēdas, seemed not to have liked his dramatic authorship and his association with singers, dancers and players. The same opinion is even now entertained by the Vaidika Brahmins about such men; and this must have been the attitude of the pious and religiously disposed Brahmins in all ages as can be seen from the following passage of Manu काव्यालापांश्च वर्जयेत्, "the study of poetry should be avoided." The poet did not secure among his own people that amount of sympathy and admiration which he expected, and he gives vent to his disappointment in the following words:—

ये नाम केचिदिह नः प्रथयन्त्यवज्ञां
जानन्ति ते किमपि तान्प्रति नैष यत्नः ।

उत्पत्स्यते मम हि कोऽपि समानधर्मा
कालोऽह्ययं निरवधिर्विपुला च पृथ्वी ॥

"Some people who spread reproach of us, know very little; and this attempt of mine is not for them; some person like me will be born, for time is unlimited and the earth is extensive."

The poet is quite right in his prediction; and the posterity has recognized the merits of his work as can be seen from the great popularity which the work enjoys.

The subject of the drama is a pure fiction created by the poet to illustrate certain typical ideas and duties of lovers enjoined in the Vātsyāyanasūtra from which our author has quoted passages in some places. In the beginning, he speaks of the adventures of his principal characters as conforming to the rules of Kāmasūtra in the following passage: औद्धत्यमायोजितकामसूत्रम्। Kāmandakī speaking of the fitness of the persons to be married, says:

इतरेतरानुरागो हि विवाहकर्मणि परार्ध्यं मङ्गलम्। गीतश्चायमर्थोऽङ्गिरसा यस्यां मनश्चक्षुषोर्निबन्धः तस्यामृद्धिः ॥

The last sentence in the above passage occurs in Vātsyāyanasūtra and was borrowed by the author of the sūtra from the Gṛhyasūtra of Āpastamba.

Again, when Mālatī was promised to Nandana even in spite of her hatred of him, and when no other course was left for Mālati except to cast off her obedience to her father and to meet her lover to be married to him, Kāmandakī, seeing the situation of Mālatī, gives her a hint about the course of action to be determined upon, by referring to the instances of Śākuntalā who loved Duṣyanta and married him, to Urvaśi who loved Purūravas and became his wife, and to Vāsavadattā, who was betrothed by her father to Sañjaya, but, disregarding her father's promise, offered herself in marriage to Udayana, and observed, outwardly, that such examples should not be followed. Her instigation is quite in accordance with the rule given in the Kāmasūtra.

याश्चान्या अपि समानजातीयाः कन्याः स्वरुच्या
भर्तारं प्राप्य मोदन्ते स्म ताश्चास्याः प्रदर्शयेत् ॥

Again, Kāmandaki says that, as Mālati is a very noble-minded girl, she should play towards her the part of a full-powered messenger (निसृष्टार्था दूती). The following is the passage of Vātsyāyana referring to that subject:—

नायकस्य नायिकायाश्च यथामनीषितमर्थमुपलभ्य स्वबुद्ध्या कार्य-संपादनी निसृष्टार्थदूती ॥

Again, Buddharakṣitā, who was talking to Mādyantikā and Lavaṅgikā, says something, the purport of which is that Nandana to whom Mālati was offered in marriage and who roughly dealt with her, was repulsed by her and quotes the following passage from the Kāmasutra of Vātsyāyana in defence of the conduct of Málatī:—

कुसुमसधर्माणो योषितः सुकुमारोपक्रमाः । तास्त्वनाधिगतविश्वासैः प्रसभमुपक्रम्यमाणाः संप्रयोगविद्वेषिण्यो भवन्ति ॥ and adds एवं किल कामसुत्तआरा मन्तेन्ति ॥

Besides this, there is a special feature in the fictitious story of the play under notice which throws light on an important social custom which has now fallen into desuetude. It is the custom now obtaining in all parts of India among the Brahmins to marry their daughters before the age of puberty, and this was not the custom in ancient times as can be seen from the gṛhyasūtras, mantras used on the occasion and the rituals performed. The girl was allowed to remain unmarried till the attainment of puberty and was married afterwards. The selection of the bridegroom was made by the parents and sometimes by the girls themselves. The same custom has been in existence in all classes below the Brahmins. But the change took place among the Brahmins first and subsequently among other classes owing to the cruelty of the Muhammadan emperors and kings. Mālati and Mādhava were both born in Brahman families and Mālati married Mādhava after the age of puberty. Had not such a custom existed among the Brahmins, the poet certainly could not have introduced it in his drama. When the custom changed, the pandits who never cared for the history of any institution, but only wanted to support the existing usages, interpolated, perverted and twisted the texts of the old Dharmaśāstras. Similarly, widow marriage, which was in vogue in ancient times, was subsequently given up and a rigid widowhood was enforced among the Brahmans and other castes. A very interesting instance of the prevalence of widow marriage has been pointed out by Professor Bhandarkar in his Report* on the search for Sanskrit manuscripts during the years 1884–85, 1885–86 and 1886–87.

"There was a recluse of the name of Maṇḍapa Kauśika. On one occasion, he sat down to dinner along with other recluses. Seeing him sitting in their company the recluses rose up, afraid to touch him as if he were a Chaṇḍāla. Maṇḍapa Kauśikā asked them why they rose up, as they should at the sight of a dog. They told him that he had become a recluse immediately after he had been a Brahmachārin, and without going through the intermediate order by marrying a wife and seeing the face of a son. A man without a son does not go to heaven; nor are religious mortifications successful if gone through by one in that condition. He then went away and asked men of his caste to give him a girl in marriage, but, as he had become an old man, nobody would give his daughter to him. Thereupon he went back to the recluses and told them of this, when they advised him to marry a widow and assume the life of a householder. By doing so, no sin was incurred by either party, as stated in the scriptures of the recluses (Tāpasāgama). For, they said:

पत्यो (पत्यौ) प्रव्रजिते क्लीबे प्रनष्टे पतिते मृते ।
पञ्चस्वापत्सु नारीणां पतिरन्यो विधीयते ॥

"In these five distressful conditions, viz., when the husband has renounced the world, is an eunuch, is not found, has fallen away from caste, or is dead, another husband is allowed to women."

. . . .

* Pages 15—17.

"In connection with another story of a re-marriage, the Brahmans of Kusumapura are represented to have said to Manōvēga, who had on that occasion appeared there in the form of an ascetic, 'even if a woman is married once, when through ill-luck the husband dies, it is fit that she should go through the ceremony (of marriage) again, provided there has been no cohabitation. When the husband has gone away from home, a good wife should wait for eight years, if she has already borne a child, and for four if she has not. If, under five such conditions and with reason, husbands are taken, the woman does not commit any sin. This is what Vyāsa and others say." *

"From all this, it follows that widow marriage was not a thing unheard of in 1014 A.D. and that the principal Smṛti texts were very well known at the time and quoted in support of it."

29. मालतीमाधवव्याख्या.

Mālatīmādhavavyākhyā, a commentary on the above by Tripurārī, son of Parvatayajvan for the first seven aṅkas and by Nānyadēva son of Haricandra and disciple of Tripurārī for the remaining three acts. I acquired two manuscripts, one by purchase and the other by gift. The former written in Telugu is neat but somewhat imperfect. Tripurāri says there were several commentaries on the drama, but he does not name them. The latter manuscript contains the commentary only for the first four Aṅkas only. A passage in which the poet has referred to the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana, viz., औद्धत्यमायोजितकामसूत्रम् is not

पञ्चस्वेषु गृहीतेषु कारणे सति भर्तृषु । न दोषो विद्यते स्त्रीणां व्यासादीनामिदं वचः ॥

The numeral "five" here must refer to the five cases mentioned in the text given above.

rightly interpreted by the commentator as can be seen from the following passage of the commentary :—

तथा औद्धत्यं शृङ्गाररसप्रधानस्यापि नायकस्य तद्विरोधि बीभत्साद्भुतरौद्ररसालम्बनत्वम्। तयायोजितमानुकूल्येन सङ्घटितं कामसूत्रं नायिकानायकयोरन्योन्यानुरागबीजम् येन तादृशम् । कामोऽनुरागः स एव वर्तिष्यमाणसर्वकार्यबीजत्वात् सूत्रमिव सूत्रम् ॥

In the first act, there is a reference to a निसृष्टार्थदूती, a full-power messenger and the idea of the messenger has been conceived according to a passage of the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana which I have quoted under the Mālatīmādhava; but the commentator Tripurāri does not notice it.

Under the passage quoted in the second act of the Mālatīmādhava from the Kāmasūtra, viz. :—

गीतश्चायमर्थोऽङ्गिरसा यस्यां मनश्चक्षुषोर्निबन्धः तस्यामृद्धिरिति *

the commentator says nothing.

In the same act, Kāmandakī says that she gave an intimation of what Mālatī ought to do, by citing the stories of Śākuntalā, Úrvaśi and Vāsavadattā, and this conforms, as already noticed, to a rule of the Kāmasūtra. But the commentator does not say anything about the poet's reference to it.

In the sixth act, Buddharakṣitā says, referring to the conduct of Nandana towards Mālatī, that women are like flowers and that they should be dealt with gently, &c. In this passage, there is a clear reference to aphorisms of Vātsyāyana already quoted.

* Vātsyāyana has quoted the following passages from the Āpastambagṛhyasūtra in which the above sentence occurs.

दत्तां गुप्तां गोपां वृषभां शरभां विनतां विकटां मुण्डां मण्डूषिकां सांकारिकां रातां पालीं मित्रां स्वनुजां वर्षकरीं च वर्जयेत् ॥

बन्धुशीललक्षणसंपन्नामरोगामुपयच्छेत । बन्धुशीललक्षणसंपन्नः श्रुतवानरोग इति वरसंपत् ॥ यस्यां मनश्चक्षुषोर्निबन्धस्तस्यामृद्धिः नेतरदाद्रियेत ॥

Āpastambagṛhya Paṭala I, Khaṇḍa III.

These facts must lead any reader of the Mālatīmādhava to the inference that the poet has formed his hero and heroine and other important characters and shaped their courses of actions according to the rules given in the Kāmasūtra. It must be however stated that in the last stānza of the second Act, under the passage पुराष्टत्तोद्गारैरपि च कथिता कार्यपदवी ॥, the commentator quotes the following passage from the Kāmasūtra:—

(यच्च सूत्रम्) याश्चान्या अपि समानजातीयाः कन्याः शकुन्तलाद्याः स्वरुच्या भर्तारं प्राप्य मोदन्ते स्म ताश्चास्याः प्रदर्शयेत् ॥

यद्पि तस्याः स्वरुच्या नायकगुणान् भूयिष्ठान् परिवर्णयेत् ॥

Thus we see that this commentator, as well as Jagaddhara, failed to interpret the passage given above rightly and to see the author's reference to many of the passages in the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana. Professor Peterson has discovered these allusions and has explained them in an interesting and learned lecture which was published in the journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society of the year 1890–94, p. 109.

(d) ANTHOLOGY.

30. सुभाषितसुधानिधिः.

Subhāṣitasudhānidhi is an anthology compiled by Śāyaṇa who was the elder brother of Mādhava and the prime minister of the king Kampa. From the colophon, we learn that Māyaṇa was the name of the father and that Śāyaṇa* was the brother of Mādhava. Kampa or Kampamahīpati was the elder brother of the king Bukka, but he did not inherit the sovereignty, and the younger brother succeeded his father. The elder brother and his son, however, enjoyed all the honours of a king and were named also rajas. While Mādhava was called the prime minister of Bukka, the real king, his elder brother had the honour of being designated the minister of the nephew of the king. The anthologist eulogizes his patron, as if he were a real king, and compiled it to enlighten the latter. The manuscript is defective. The omissions made here and there would come up to about 30 stanzas.

* The same honour was allowed to Saṅgama, son of Kampa, and Sāyaṇa was regarded as the minister of Saṅgama also, as can be seen from the colophons of the Dhātuvṛtti (Mysore edition).

The work is divided into eighty-four paddhatis, which are as follow:—

The manuscript ends with the following colophon :—

इति श्रीपूर्वपश्चिमसमुद्राधीश्वरारिरायविभालकम्पराजमहाप्रधान-मायणरत्नाकरसुधाकरसङ्गमराजमहामन्त्रिणा मायणसुतमाधवसहोदर-सायणाचार्यविरचिते सुभाषितसुधानिधौ अर्थपर्व सम्पूर्णम् ॥

A glance at the list of subjects will show that the compiler's object of the selection was to inculcate the duties of a king; and that, to accomplish the object, he has selected passages treating of those duties and containing thoughts and ideas connected with them. He has, therefore, avoided the selection of passages which are not of any practical utility and are interesting only from a poetical point of view. The work is more valuable than the Subhāṣitāvali of Vallabhadēva and Śārṅgadharapaddhati which have been compiled to exhibit poetical beauties. Some of the stanzas quoted in this work appear also in Subhāṣitāvali.

In the Rājapaddhati, the author quotes many stanzas in which reference is made to the following kings: Sundarapāṇḍya, Arjunabhūpāla, Cālukyaviṣṇudēva, Srīkarṇa, Raghupati, Gaṇapatinṛpati, Manumanarapati, Tikkabhūpati, Rāmanātha Sāhasāṅka, Dēvaṇavibhu, Kampaṇa, Raṅgakṣitipati, Raṅganātha, son of Nṛsimha, and Nṛsimha.

CLASS V.—POETICS.

31. अलङ्कारकौस्तुभः सव्याख्यः.

Alaṅkārakaustubha with Commentary.—The original work was written by Kalyāṇasubrahmaṇya, who was the son of Subrahmaṇya, the son of Gōpāla, and belonged to the family of Pērūru. The work was written in honour of Padmanābha, the god of the temple of Anantaśayana (Travancore), and of the king Srī Vanji Bālarāma Varma Kulaśēkhara. The name of the commentator is not given. The work was composed in 1798 A.D., or a few years later, as the king of Travancore of the above name ruled in 1798–1810 A.D. There are other works of the same name on the same subject; one mentioned in Eggeling's Catalogue of the India Office Library, which was written by Viśveśvara; and another mentioned in Rajēndra Lāla Mitrā's Catalogue, IV, page 237, which was written by Kavikarṇapura, who was born in the year 1524 A.D.

32. कविकल्पलता.

Kavikalpalatā is a work on the art of poetical composition composed by Dēvēsvarakavi, son of Vāgbhaṭa, the prime minister of the king of Malva. In a stanza occurring at the end of the book which is called Ṣaḍāracakrabandha, the author gives his name and his father's name in the following words: वहदनन्दनः देवेशुरकविः which mean "Dēvēśurakavi, the son of Vahada." The first word is a corruption of the Sanskrit word वाग्भट which is the name of the father. The form वहद which is very like the word वाहट the name of the celebrated author of the medical work Nidāna connects the latter बाहट with वाग्भट which, in Tamil, is changed into Vāgada. From the corrupt form we are led to infer that similar names of Sanskrit authors, such as वज्रट, कैयट, मम्मट must have been derived from compound words of which the latter word was भट or भट्ट such as वज्रभट, केशवभट and माधवभट.

The author of Kavikalpalatā also wrote a work called Candrakalāpa to which he refers the readers for information not given in the Kavikalpalatā.

33. चन्द्रालोकः कुवलयानन्दाख्यव्याख्यासहितः.

Candrālōka and its commentary Kuvalayānanda.—This is a work on Alaṅkāras or figures of speech composed by Appayyadīkṣita, son of Raṅgarāja. It is said that Appayya who wished to compose a work on Alaṅkāras was sent by his father to go to the king Vēnkaṭādri. The king induced him to compose the work and settled on him an annual allowance in consideration of his scholarship. Appayyadīkṣita returned with the boon and wrote the kārikās on the subject under the name of Candrālōka and wrote also a commentary called Kuvalayānanda, as can be seen from the following passage :—

किं च "काव्यं यशसेऽर्थकृते" इत्यादिकप्रामाणिकपण्डितोक्तं राजप्रसादादिकमभिहितम् । एवं हि श्रूयते । अप्पय्यदीक्षितो नाम चन्द्रालोकं नाम ग्रन्थं चिकीर्षुः पण्डितो रङ्गराजसूनुः स पितुराज्ञया वेङ्कटाद्रिराजमुपजगाम । स च राज्ञाभ्यर्थितश्चन्द्रालोकं नाम ग्रन्थं चकार । राज्ञा वर्षाशनं दत्वा प्रहितो ऽलङ्कारविवेचनाय प्रार्थितश्चेमाः कारिकाः कुवलयानन्दं च कृत्वा वेङ्कटेशं प्रसादयामास ।

This passage is taken from a quotation given in Eggeling's catalogue of the Sanskrit manuscripts in the Library of the India office from the Dīpikā, a commentary on Kuvalayānanda, written by Āśādhara.

The name of the king who induced Appayyadīkṣita to write the treatise on alaṅkāra is given at the end of the work.

अमुं कुवलयानन्दमकरोदप्पदीक्षितः । नियोगाद्वेङ्कटपतेर्निरुपाधिकृपानिधेः ॥

"Appayyadīkṣita composed the Kuvalayānanda by the command of Vēṅkaṭapati who was the mine of disinterested mercy."

From the statement of Appayyadīkṣita in the beginning of the work, it appears, however, that he did not compose the whole original work, but adopted the work of Jayadēva greatly and added definitions of new alaṅkāraṣ and their illustrations. This perhaps roused the indignation of Jayadēva, the author of Candrālōka, and was referred to by him in his drama of the Prasannarāghava as an unworthy plagiarism—Vide the Notice on the Prasannarāghava.

34. चित्रमीमांसा.

Citramīmāṁsā, a treatise written by Appayyadīkṣita on alaṅkaras or figures of speech. The manuscript ends with the Atiśayōktyalaṅkāra. The work is supposed to have been left by the author unfinished and the following passage taken from Candrikā, a commentary on the Kuvalayānanda of Appayyadīkṣita, written by Vaidyanātha, supports the general tradition :—उत्प्रेक्षाग्रन्थानन्तरं चित्रमीमांसा न क्वापि दृश्यते ॥ "Citramīmāṁsā is not seen anywhere beyond the Utprēkṣālaṅkāra." Citramīmāṁsā has been printed in many places and is very popular in Southern India.

35. प्रतापरुद्रीयम् अथवा प्रतापरुद्रयशोभूषणम्.

Prātaparudrīya or Pratāparudrayaśōbhūṣaṇa.—A work on poetics written by Vidyānātha who was patronized by Pratāparudra, king of Ēkaśilā. This was the capital of his kingdom and the name is a Sanskrit rendering of the name of Oraṅgallu, the modern Warangole, about 8 miles N.N.E. of Hyderabad. Pratāparudra, ruled over the country from 1268 to 1319 A.D. for 50 years and was a great patron of learning. This work is very popular in Southern India and is studied by every Sanskrit student. The author mentions Bhāmah and other previous authors to whom he pays homage and whose he seems to have studied. The work is written in honor of the patron and, in every stanza illustrative of the rules, he is referred to. The book is divided into nine prakaraṇās, viz. :—

(1) Nāyakaprakaraṇa.
(2) Kāvyaprakaraṇa.
(3) Nāṭakaprakaraṇa.
(4) Rasaprakaraṇa.
(5) Dōṣaprakaraṇa.
(6) Guṇaprakaraṇa.
(7) Śabdālaṅkāraprakaraṇa.
(8) Arthālaṅkāraprakaraṇa.
(9) Miśrālaṅkāraprakaraṇa.

36. शृङ्गारमञ्जरी.

Śṛṅgāramañjarī, a short work on poetics, written by Ajitasēnadēvayatīśvara at the request of a Jaina king of the lunar race named Rāya (Kāmirāya), for his instruction. The work consists of 128 stanzas and is divided into three chapters. The author was a Jaina priest of Cāmuṇḍarāya who flourished in the latter part of the tenth century A.D. He was the minister of the Gaṅga king Rācamalla. Ajita was the teacher of Nāgavarma, a Kanarese poet, who flourished in the reign of Rakkasa Ganga, a younger brother of the above Rācamalla. Ajitasēna was the head of the mutt of Bankipore.

CLASS VI.—DARŚANAS—(b) THE ADVAITA VEDĀNTA.

37. भेदाधिकारः भेदधिक्कारसत्क्रियाख्यव्याख्यया सहितः.

Bhēdadhikkāra with a commentary called Bhēdadhikhārasatkriyā.—The original is a work on the Advaita philosophy by Nṛsimhāśrama who was a pupil of Jaggannāthāśrama. It is similar, in its treatment of the subject to the Advaitadīpikā composed by another Nṛsimhāśrama who was a pupil of Gīrvāṇēndrasarasvati. Nārāyaṇāśrama who was a pupil of the author of this work wrote a commentary on it named Bhēdadhikkārasatkriyā, a copy of which also is found in our collection.

38. पञ्चदशीप्रकरणव्याख्या.

Pañcadaśīprakaraṇavyākhyā is a commentary on the Pañcadaśī or Pañcadaśīprakaraṇa, by Rāmakṛṣṇa who was a pupil of the authors of the text, Bhāratītīrtha and Vidyāraṇya. The former wrote the Pañcadaśī up to the 10th chapter and the latter the remaining five chapters. They both were the pupils of Śaṅkarānanda. The original work is divided into fifteen chapters, which are named as follows :—

(1) Pratyaktattvavivēka.
(2) Bhūtapañcavivēka.
(3) Pañcakōśavivēka.
(4) Advaitavivēka.
(5) Mahāvākyavivēka.

Brahmānanda which is sub-divided into the five following chapters :—

(6) Yōgānanda.
(7) Ātmānanda.
(8) Advaitānanda.
(9) Vidyānanda.
(10) Viṣayānanda.
(11) Citradīpa.
(12) Tṛptidīpa.
(13) Kūtasthadīpa.
(14) Dhyānadīpa.
(15) Nāṭakadīpa.

The manuscript under notice ends with a portion of the Tṛptīdīpa. In the Madras edition printed in Telugu the portion Brahmānanda with the five divisions is placed at the end and is shown as the work of Vidyāraṇya by the colophon. In these portions there is no reference to Śaṅkarānanda in the invocatory stanzas as in the remaining portions written by Bhāratītīrtha; and in consequence they must have been written by Vidyāraṇya. Therefore, the arrangement of the chapters made in the manuscript which puts the five divisions of the Brahmānanda written by Vidyāraṇya betweeen the fifth chapter Mahāvākyavivēka and the sixth chapter Yogānanda is wrong.

39. लौकिकन्यायरत्नाकरः.

Laukikanyāyaratnākara.—A collection of nyāyas or illustrations and analogies which are used in explanation of the theories and principles of the sciences. The work is divided into two portions, Pūrvārdha and Uttarārdha. The nyāyas are explained and their uses are illustrated by examples taken chiefly from the Vēdānta philosophy and sometimes from the Pūrvamīmāṁsa. For instance, when it is said that a person who has known the Supreme Being is freed from sorrow, तरति शोकमात्मवित्, the knowledge of the whole sentence and of each word is understood simultaneously just as the birds, young and old, pounce upon a paddy field and pick up the seeds of grain scattered; and the illustration is called खले कपोतन्याय; 'the anology of the pigeons in a paddy field;' and the following stanza is quoted :—

वृद्धाः युवानः शिशवः कपोताः खले यथामी युगपत्पतन्ति ।
तथैव सर्वे युगपत्पदार्थाः परस्परेणान्वयिनो भवन्ति ॥

Again, it is said in the Purāṇas that Śiva and Viṣṇu thought of each other in the beginning of creation and so became like each other. To illustrate this the Bhramarakīṭanyāya is cited. The words bhramara and kīṭa indicate 'a wasp' and 'a worm' respectively. The wasp, it is said, takes the worm to its nest and the latter, always thinking of his enemy through fear, is at last changed into the form of a wasp: thus is produced the young wasp which, when it grows sufficiently old, leaves the nest to live independently. No pandit in India questions the truth of the above statement. It is, however, a fiction, like many other things which are implicitly believed by the Hindus, as can be seen from the accounts of the habits of the mason wasp.

Similarly other analogies are explained ; such as,

चन्द्रमुखन्यायः

गोगवयन्यायः.

मार्जारव्याघ्रन्यायः.

श्वसिंहन्यायः.

यावत्तैलं तावद्व्याख्यानमितिन्यायः.

भिक्षुः कौपीनलाभं बहुमन्यते°

दरिद्रः कन्यालाभं बहुमन्यते°.

यावत्स्नाता तावत्पुण्यम्°.

नहि सर्वः सर्वंजानाति°.

सर्वसाध्यान्निवृत्तिनापवादाय°.

नाह सर्वत्रानीशशक्तिः.

Such analogies are frequently used in literary as well as in philosophical and argumentative works, for instance, घुणाक्षरन्यायः in the Prasannarāghava and the Daśakumāracaritra.

काकतालीयन्यायः in the Candrālōka.

जामात्रर्थं श्रपितस्य सूपस्यातिथिभ्यः प्रथमपरिवेषणम् in the Kuvalayānanda.

एकमनुसन्धित्सितो ऽपरं प्रच्यवति इतिन्यायः Śaṅkara's commentary of the Śārīrakasūtra.

If any work containing all the well-known analogies and their explanations be published, it will no doubt be a very useful work of reference to students of Sanskrit literature. A collection of such nyāyas were published in the Pandit; and another work containing a large number of them were prepared by a pandit in Bombay. The Śabdakalpadruma gives under the word न्याय a list of thirty-two nyāyas with an explanation of each nyāya and the names of works in which they are referred to, and another list containing the mere names of 338 nyāyas which ends with the colophon: इति श्रीरामदयालुशिष्यरघुनाथविरचितो लौकिकन्यायसङ्ग्रहः.

All the above nyāyas and the colophon are taken from an abridgment of the Laukikanyāyaratnākara, which was written by the same author as shown below. The author of the work under report was named Raghunātha who was a Rajput. He was the son of Gulābrāya and belonged to the lunar race and the family of Vindarāya. The author calls himself उदासीनावस्थ 'of neutral position' from which we understand he was a recluse or a hermit. He was the disciple of Rāmadayālu. The smaller work written by the author called 'Laukikanyāyasaṅgraha' is a summary of the work under notice and begins as follows :—

नत्वा शंभुं हरिं गौरीं विधिं दुण्ढि च भारतीम् ।
क्रियते रघुनाथेन लौकिकन्यायसङ्ग्रहः ॥

This work is noticed by R. Mitra in his Notices of Sanskrit Manuscripts, Vol. IX, Part 1.*

40. नरपतिजयचर्या.

Narapatijayacaryā is a work on omens by Padmādityadēvakavi or Narapati who was born in the solar dynasty and became learned by a boon of the goddess of speech. The manuscript contains four adhyāyas only. At the end of the first and the fourth adhyāya, the following colophons occur :—

इति श्रीमहाराजाधिराजश्रीसूर्यवंशान्वयश्रीसरस्वतीवरप्रसादकुल-पद्मादित्यदेवकविविरचिते नरपतिजयचर्यास्वरोदये . . . . अध्यायः ॥

In the beginning of the book, the author calls himself Narapati and refers to many works which he consulted as the Brahmayāmala, the Viṣṇuyāmala, the Rudrayāmala, the Ādityayāmala, the Skandayāmala, the Yuddhajayāmara, the Kaumārīkauśala, the Yoginījālasamhāra and others. According to Aufrecht, the work is divided into seven chapters which are named—Śāstrasamhāra.

Svarabalōdaya.
Caturaśīticakrabalōdaya.
Bhūbalākhyāna.
Bālasaṅgraha.
Tātkālikaśaśāṅkādinirṇaya.
Gṛhaśāntikavidhāna.

Professor Bhandarkar gives an extract from the end of a complete copy of the work from which we learn the following. The work was written at Anahilapattana in the reign of Ajayapāla who occupied the Cālukya throne between 1174–1177, A.D. His father was Āmradéva and lived at Dhārā, the capital of Malva. He also wrote another work on Jyautiṣa named Jyōtiṣkalpa.

41. नारदसंहिता.

Nāradasamhitā is a work on Astrology by Nārada. He divides the whole Jyotiśśāstra into three branches :—

(1) Siddhānta, astronomy.
(2) Hōra, astrology or horoscopy, and
(3) Samhita, science, astrology, alchemy, omens, &c.

The manuscript under notice contains a small portion of the work and deals with the third subject. Having treated already of the first two branches, he says, he will now treat of the third.

42. वास्तुप्रकरणम्.

Vāstuprakaraṇa is a portion of the Jyautiṣadarpaṇa by Kāñcanayallayya. It treats of the time for the building of a new house and for entering it after it is finished and the ceremonies to be performed on those occasions. He quotes Kāśyapa and other authors. The construction of a house should be commenced in the months Vaiśākha, Śrāvana, Kārtika, Māgha, Phālguna. In the month of Srāvana, though god Viṣṇu is sleeping, houses should be built and entered when the sun is in the ninth or the fifth house from the sign of the zodiac in which the building is to be commenced or the entry into the house is to be made. When the house is finished, the houseowner should worship the presiding deity of the building, Vāstudēvatā, make hōmas or offerings in fire kindled in a pot with fuels, ghee and rice cakes ; and, accompanied by music, offer oblations to divine beings in the north-east, in the south-east, south-west, and north-west and distribute gifts of money among the Brahmins. After the performance of these ceremonies, he should enter into the house and not otherwise.

43. कामकलासूत्रम् सव्याख्यानम्.

Kāmakalāsūtra with its commentary.—This is a work on the worship of Tripurasundarī, wife of god Śiva under the name of Kāmakalā. The supreme energy which emanated from Śiva and is named Tripurasundarī. Śiva * is called Kāma, as he is the supreme being desired by all the sages. The whole world is produced by the combination of Śiva and Śakti, the above energy. This union may be recognized in a gross and a subtle form and is to be worshipped in two forms, in the attributive form and the non-attributive form. The attributive consists in worshipping the diagram called Śrīcakra and the non-attributive, in worshipping the combined god and goddess according to the method prescribed in the Upaniṣad called Bhāvanōpaniṣad.

The sūtras were written by Punyānandanātha and the commentary, by Nāthānanda.

The following authors and works are quoted in the commentary, and I have given references to the pages in which the quotations occur :—

CLASS IX.—(a) MANTRA.

44. गीतासारः

Gītāsāra, is a chapter in the Bhīṣmaparva of the Mahābhārata according to the colophon.* It treats of the Gītasārastōtramahāmantra, the ṛṣīs of which are Brahma, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara, and the deities are Agni, Vayu and Sūrya, and which is used for the satisfaction of god Śiva. Arjuna asks Kṛṣṇa to tell him the efficacy of the syllable ओम्, its form and place. Kṛṣṇa replies that the earth, the fire, the Ṛg Vēda and the world of earth and the creator Brahma are absorbed in the letter अ a; that the heaven, Vāyu, the Yajur Vēda, the world called Bhuvar and the everlasting Viṣṇu in the letter उ u; and that the sky, the sun, the Sāma Vēda, the world Suvar and god Śiva in the letter म m. The Gítá is equal to all the Vēdas, just as the code of Manu, to all the śāstras, the Ganges, to all the holy waters, and Vishnu, to all the deities. Though the work is said in the colophon to be a portion of the Bhīṣmaparva of the Mahābhārata, it is not found there. Hall mentions a work of the same name by Kaivalyānanda Sarasvati, consisting of 174 stanzas, and giving the substance of the Bhagavadgītā.

45. प्रपञ्चसारसंग्रहः.

Prapañcasārasaṅgraha.—This is an epitome by Gīrvāṇēndra of the Prapañcasāra written by Śaṅkarācārya. According to Hall and Professor Peterson * Gīrvāṇēndra was a pupil of Viśvēśvara Sarasvati and had two disciples named Dēvēndra and Narasimha. But, in the copy of the work we have now before us, there is a reference to Amarēndrayatīśvara who was the preceptor of his preceptor Viśvēśvara Sarasvati. He says that he gives a short substance of the Prapañcasāra, as the mantras, tantras and the yantras mentioned by Śankarācārya in that work are too difficult to be understood and practised, and that he has made some additions from Mantrasāra, Kramadīpikā, Sanatkumārīya, Sāradātilaka and Mantradēvatāprakāśikā and others. In the treatment of the book, he follows the way adopted in a commentary called Satsampradāyapravartinī. The manuscript under notice contains the first seven paṭalas completely and is incomplete.

CLASS X.—(a) STOTRA OR PANEGYRIC ON THE DEITIES.

46. शिवभुजङ्गस्तोत्रम्.

Śivabhujaṅgastōtra.—This work consists of thirty-seven verses of the Bhujaṅgaprayāta metre composed by Śaṅkarācārya in praise of Śiva. This is as popular among the Śaivites as the Śivánandalahari and Soundaryalaharī noticed lower down and is daily recited. The authorship of the work by Śaṅkarācārya as that of the other two works depends upon the authenticity of a mere tradition. Reference is made to three of the sixty-three saints of the Śaiva religion in the following stanza :—

न शक्नोमि कर्तुं परद्रोह † लेशं
कथं प्रीयसे त्वं न जाने गिरीश ।
तथापि प्रसीदाशु कस्यापि कान्ता–
सुतद्रोहिणो वा पितृद्रोहिणो वा ॥

---

* See Catalogue of Ulvar Sanskrit Library.

† Here the word "द्रोह" is used in the sense of "injury."

"I am unable to commit even a slight injury, and I do not know how you will be pleased with me. Be kind soon, however, to some person who has killed his wife, son or father."

The allusion is here to Iyaṟpagaināyanār, Śiṟuttoṇḍanāyanār and Caṇḍēśanāyañar.

Iyaṟpagaināyanār was a staunch devotee of Śiva and worshipped him always. He had also undertaken a vow of granting everything that a Śaiva beggar asked. God Siva, wishing to test the sincerity of his vow, assumed the form of a Śaiva Brahmin and asked him a gift. Iyarpagaināyanār promised to give it whatever it was. The god informed him that he was enamoured of his wife and requested him to fulfil his desire. The devotee complied with the request and, having communicated his promise to his wife, told her to go to the Śaiva Brahmin and to live with him. The wife thought it was her duty to obey her husband, left her home and followed the beggar. God Śiva informed the devotee that he would be attacked by his and his wife's relatives and that he should assist him while his wife was being taken away. Iyaṟpagaināyanār consented and followed the Brahmin with sword in hand, and killed many of those who objected to the Brahman taking away his wife. The Brahmin accompanied by the devotee and his wife went out of the town and suddenly disappeared. God Śiva and his wife Pārvati appeared before them and said, "you will live happily in this world and after death you will go to Kailāsa and live there in my presence in perfect beatitude."

Śiṟuttoṇḍanāyanār was a Śaiva devotee. He lived in a town called Tiruccengāḍu and was ordinarily known by the name of Paranjōtiyār. He was born in a minister's family and was employed by the king as a commander of the army. His wife was called Tiruveṅgāṭṭunaṅgai. They had a son who was five years old and was fondly loved by them. God Śiva having assumed the form of a Śaiva devotee came to the house of Śiruttoṇḍanāyanār when he was away from his house. The wife having received the devotee piously requested him to remain in the house for breakfast; and informed him that her husband who had gone in search of a Śaiva devotee would return soon. But he told her that he would not remain in the house when the master of the house was absent and that he would wait at a place called Gaṇapatīcuram. After the return of the husband, he was informed of the arrival of a Śaiva devotee. He went to the devotee and requested him to honor the host with his company at breakfast; but the devotee accepted the invitation on condition of his cooking the flesh of a good looking and healthy boy five years old. The host could not get a boy of that description to be victimized for the palatal satisfaction of the carnivorus guest. The host found that his own son satisfied all the conditions laid down by the guest and persuaded his wife to kill her dear son and cook the meal with his flesh. The meal was accordingly prepared and the guest sat with the host for breakfast. The former asked the latter to bring his boy to be present at the meal and asked him to call the boy by his name. When the father obeyed the devotee and did, as was commanded to do, the boy came into the house and appeared before his parents and relatives to their great joy. The guest vanished, and God Śiva and his consort, having appeared before them, promised to the devotee and his wife the final heavenly bliss.

There was a Brahmin named Eccadattan at Śeyññalūr on the southern banks of the river Maṇṇiyār in the Chola country. He had a son named Vicāraśarma who, though young, studied the Vedās and Śastras, became very learned and pious and devoted himself to the worship of Śiva. There was a cowherd to whom were entrusted the cows of all the inhabitants of the village. One day Vicāraśarma saw the cowherd ill-treating the cows in his charge and, having reported the matter to the owners of the cows, offered his own services to look after them. The owners of the cows entrusted their animals to Vicāraśarma and from that time he was tending them. Under his care, the animals became stout and strong and yielded much more milk than they used to do. Vicāraśarma made a liṅga, the emblem of god Siva, out of the sand in the bed of the river Maṇṇiyār, and poured a great quantity of milk in worshipping the god; and yet there was no decrease in the quantity of milk produced by each cow. But a Brahmin saw the use made of a portion of the milk of the cows and reported the matter to the inhabitants who made a complaint to the father of the boy tending the cows. One day the father went to the scene of the boy's worship of Śiva and, having concealed himself amidst the branches of a lofty tree, watched what was done by his son. Much enraged at the conduct of his son, he descended from the tree and destroyed the liṅga with a stout stick and broke down the pots containing the milk. The son had his feelings wounded by the sacriligious action of his father, and, having killed him at once, finished his worship, at the end of which God Śiva who was quite pleased with this sincere piety of the devotee, conferred on him all the boons asked, and resuscitated the deceased father of the devotee, who was also allowed to go to Kailāsa in virtue of the piety of his son.

Thus Śaṅkarācārya has referred to three saints in the Śivabhujaṅgastōtra. I shall now show that he has also referred to Kaṇṇappanāyanār and Tirujñānasambandhar in the Śivānandalaharī and the Saundaryalaharī respectively.

47. शिवानन्दलहरी.

Sivānandalaharī.—This is a collection of hundred verses, the composition of which is attributed to Śaṅkarācārya, the great founder of the Advaita philosophy. It contains encomiums on God Śiva and is committed to memory and recited by the Śaivites everywhere in Southern India. If the authorship of Śaṅkarācārya is true, the work acquires a very highly historical importance as it refers to Kaṇṇappanāyanār, one of the sixty-three saints of the Śaiva religion and allows us to infer the priority of the saint to Śaṅkarācārya. The reference occurs in the following stanza:—

मार्गावर्तितपादुका पशुपतेरङ्गस्य कूर्चायते
गण्डूषांबुनिषेचनं पुररिपोर्दिव्याभिषेकायते ।

किञ्चिद्भक्षितमांसशेषकबलं नव्योपहारायते
भक्तिः किन्न करोत्यहो वनचरो भक्तावतंसायते ॥

"A pair of wooden shoes used for walking on paths becomes a bunch of flowers to the person of Śiva; the spitting of the waters rinsing the mouth, a holy bath; pieces of flesh remaining after eating become fresh offerings of eatables; and a forester, a great devotee; for what is impossible for piety?"

In the town of Uduppūr, near Kālahasti, there was a huntsman named Nāgan who was the king of the wild country and governed the inhabitants. He had a wife named Taṭṭai by whom he got a son, by the favour of god Subrahmaṇya, named Tiṇṇan. The son was very strong and powerful and, though a mere boy, he attacked the wild beasts, such as lions and tigers and subdued them. The father became old and, when the inhabitants of the wild country governed by him were much harassed by wild beasts, they complained to him of the havoc committed by the beasts and requested him to destroy them. The old king deputed his son to the business, and the latter, having dressed and armed himself suitably, went to the forest accompained by many followers. He destroyed many beasts of prey and, in the course of his hunting expedition, arrived at Kàlahasti where he ascended the mountain to worship the god of the temple situated on its top. He became very pious and his heart melted with love for god. Having been informed of the worship of the god made by a Brahman, he bathed in the river and ate the flesh of a boar which had been cooked by his followers. After satisfying his hunger, he took the remaining flesh with him and put some water into his mouth and approached the god Śiva. He removed with his leg the flowers that had been thrown on the liṅga, spat the mouthful of water he brought and offered the flesh of the boar which he had partly eaten. This worship was heartily accepted by God Śiva and the devotee was admitted for ever among the favourites of the god.

48. सौन्दर्यलहरी.

Saundaryalaharī.—This is another work attributed to Śaṅkarācārya like the preceding and contains a centum of panegyric verses in honor of the goddess Pārvati who is the consort of the god Śiva and represents a personification of the divine power as exhibited in the creation, the sustenance and the destruction of the world. The work embodies all sorts of philosophical theories and religious and mystic cults and, on this account, it has acquired a great popularity. Its importance is enhanced considerably by the existence of many commentaries. It refers to Jñānasambandha who is the most eminent of the sixty-three saints of the Śaiva religion. If it be the work of Śaṅkarācārya, we should infer the priority of Jñānasambandhar to Śaṅkarācārya and attribute to the Śaiva religion a great antiquity. Jñānasambandhar is referred to in the following stanza of the Saundaryalaharī :—

तव स्तन्यं मन्ये धरणिधरकन्ये हृदयतः
पयःपारावारं परिवहति सारस्वतमिव ।
दयावत्या दत्तं द्रविडशिशुरास्वाद्य तव यत्
कवीनां प्रौढानामजनि कमनीयः कवयिता ॥

"O, daughter of the Himālayas, I think that the milk of your breast causes to flow as it were a milky ocean of learning which you gave mercifully to the Tamil child and by drinking which the child became the most charming poet amidst great poets." I consulted the commentary on the work written by Lolla Lakṣmīdhara, and, according to him द्राविडशिशु "Tamil child" refers to Śaṅkarācārya himself, as shown in the following passage: द्रविडशिशुः द्रविडजातिसमुद्भवो बालः एतद्ग्रन्थस्य कर्ता. "The term द्रविडशिशुः means a child born in the Tamil class of people, that is, the author of the poem." But a Tamil pandit named Vīrakavirāyar who flourished about two centuries ago takes the word to mean Jñānasambandhar. He has translated the word द्रविडशिशु as Varuṇanaṉguṟukavuṇiyaṉ * Siṟumadalai which means "the little child born of the superior caste, that is, the Brahmin caste, and of the Kaundinyagōtra" and these words undoubtedly refer to Jñānasambandhar. But as the interpretations are conflicting, we are not in a position to determine which of them is true. In favour of the latter interpretation it may be alleged that, as Śaṅkaracārya alludes to Iyarpagai-nāyanār, Siṟuttoṇḍanāyanār and Caṇḍēśanāyanār in the Śiva-bhujaṅgastōtra and to Kaṇṇappanāyanār in the Śivānandalaharī, he may very likely have alluded to Jñānasambandhar also, who like the other saints is included among the sixty-three Śaiva saints. This argument cannot lead to any settled conclusion unless we are certain that Saundaryalaharī and other eulogistic poems are the works of Śaṅkaracārya. If this is granted, it will follow that Tirujñānasambandhar and the other saints who are mentioned by Śaṅkarācārya in his poems were either his contemporaries or lived before him. † As the age of Śaṅkarācārya is settled to be the latter part of the eighth century A.D., the Śaiva saints must be referred to the same period or to an earlier one. ‡

‡ The following passages are quoted from two other commentaries on the Saundaryalaharī, one of which takes the word द्रविडशिशुः as referring to Śaṅkarācārya and the other to Sambandha :—

डिण्डिमाख्या.

Śaṅkarācāryas, whatever were their personal names before their assumption of the holy dignity. There are ten names given before Śaṅkarācārya, beginning with the gods Śiva, Viṣṇu and Brahma. Each occupant of the seat selected from among his disciples a proper person who was to succeed him, and when the incumbent died, the heir-elect was installed in his stead. As this usage was invariably observed, we may fairly assume that the above relationship existed between each Śaṅkarācārya and his successor. The list was copied from a manuscript found in the Mut and may be held authentic and reliable. The list is traced downwards from Śaṅkarācārya to the god Śiva himself and becomes fictitious towards the beginning, but from Vyāsa upwards possesses a thorough historical value. The list is as follows :—

1. God Śiva.
2. ,, Viṣṇu.
3. ,, Brahman.
4. ,, Vasiṣṭha.
5. Śakti.
6. Parāśara.

In the list, Vidyāraṇya is represented as the 22nd ; and his assumption of the title of Śaṅkarācārya took place in 1331 A.D.

and he was followed up to the present time by nineteen priests. If we divide the period of time that passed from that date, we get an average duration of 29 years for each priest. But previous to Vidyāraṇya, we have ten names up to the first Śaṅkarācārya whose age varies from the middle of the seventh to the end of the eighth century. Taking the end of the seventh century for a rough calculation, we see that ten priests have occupied the holy seat of Śṛṅgēri for 631 years and that we get an average of 60 years for each priest and the average is too long. We should, therefore, take the manuscript as defective, until the above discrepancy is satisfactorily explained away.

50. शङ्कराचार्यचरित्रम्.

Saṅkarācāryacaritra—The work contains a short account of the life of Saṅkarācārya who established the Advaita philosophy. It was written by Govindanātha and is divided into nine chapters, and the following are the contents of those chapters :—

The following predecessors and disciples of Śaṅkara are mentioned in the book :—

Śuka.
Gauḍapāda.

Surēsvarācārya.

The following stanza occurs in the ninth chapter of the book :—

अष्टवर्षे चतुर्वेदः द्वादशे सर्वशास्त्रवित् ।
षोडशे कृतवान् भाष्यं द्वात्रिंशे मुनिरत्यगात् ॥

This same stanza occurs also in the Manīṣāpañcakavyākhyā, Ēkaślōkīvyākhyā and the Muṇḍakōpaniṣadvyākhyā.

51. चारुचर्या.

Cārucaryā is a work on the daily habits and duties of the Hindus, describing the various articles used in food and those which are to be used in different seasons for health and comfort. It is a very important work as it contains much information about the necessaries and luxuries of Indian life and the ordinary preventive and curative medicines almost known to every Hindu family. It is attributed to the king Bhōja, who ruled at Dhāra in the eleventh century. I have not seen the book mentioned in any of the printed catalogues of Sanskrit manuscripts except in Dr. Burnell's catalogue of the Tanjore palace library. The following stanzas are quoted from the book in the commentary of Bhartṛhari's Subhāṣitatriśati by Rāmacandra :—

(तदुक्तं चारुचर्यायामृतुचर्याप्रस्तावे सर्वज्ञभोजराजेन):

त्रिषु च दधि निषेव्यं ग्रीष्मकाले वसन्ते
शरदि च परिवर्ज्यं वाञ्छता दीर्घमायुः ।

यदि खलु परिवाञ्छा सेव्यतां सर्वकालं

(तदुक्तं चारुचर्यायाम्).

मनसो हर्षणं श्रेष्ठं रतिदं मदकारणम् ।
मुखरोगहरं हृद्यं दीपनं वस्तिशोधनम् ॥
मुखशुद्धि क्रिमिहरं ताम्बूलं श्रीकरं परम् ॥

"Curd should be used thrice, that is, in the summer and spring seasons and during autumn, and should be avoided, by a person desirous of longevity. If a person likes to use it, in all seasons let him eat it with sugar, honey, peas and rice gruel. Betel gladdens the heart very well, produces sexual desire and cheerfulness, removes the diseases of the mouth, is pleasant, causes good appetite and clears the bowels; it purifies the mouth, destroys worms and gives beauty."

The manuscript procured for the library during the year 1893–94 is imperfect; but a better manuscript was obtained in the year 1894–95 and copied.

TOLGĀPPIYAM (ORTHOGRAPHY AND ETYMOLOGY) WITH THE COMMENTARY OF NACCIṈĀRKKIṈIYAR.

THE first portion of the work, viz., Orthography, with the commentary of Iḷambūraṇar, has already been noticed on pp. 28–30, Report No. I; and some additional information regarding the work and its author is here given. The whole work of Tolgāppiyar consists of the following three parts, viz., Orthography, Etymology and Poetics, each part being subdivided into nine sections, which are as follow:—

1. Orthography (Eḻuttadhikāram).

§ (1) Nūṉmarabu.
(2) Moḻimarabu.
(3) Piṟappiyal.
(4) Puṇariyal.
(5) Togaimarabu.
(6) Urubiyal.
(7) Uyirmayaṅgiyal.
(8) Puḷḷimayaṅgiyal.

2. Etymology (Solladhikāram).

§ (1) Kiḷaviyākkam.
(2) Vēṟṟumaiyiyal.
(3) Vēṟṟumaimayaṅgiyal.
(4) Viḷimarabu.
(5) Peyariyal.
(6) Viṉaiyiyal.
(7) Iḍaiccolliyal.
(8) Uriccolliyal.

(5) Poruḷiyal.
(6) Meyppāṭṭiyal.
(7) Uvamaiyiyal.
(8) Śeyyuḷiyal.
(9) Marabiyal.

The grammar of Tolgāppiyar has been commented upon by Kallāḍar, Pērāśiriyar, Iḷampūraṇar, Śēṉāvaraiyar and Naccinārkkiṉiyar. The commentary of Pērāśiriyar is referred * to by Naccinarkkiṉiyar, but the work has not yet been discovered. Kallāḍar's commentary, of which a MS. has been secured, is only for the chapter on Etymology. It is said that Śēṉāvaraiyar wrote his commentary only upon the chapter on Etymology, and the work has been printed. But Naccinārkkiṉiyar has commented upon the whole of the grammar of Tolgāppiyar ; and the commentary has been printed.

The preface † to this work is attributed to Paṉambāraṉār, one of the twelve disciples of the sage Agastya. He speaks of the Tamil country as bounded on the north by Vēṅkaṭam, on the south by Kumari, and on the east and west by the ocean. In explanation of this, the commentator says : "இவை (Vēṅkaṭam and Kumari) இரண்டும் அகப்பாட்டெல்லையாயின ; என்னை ? குமரியாற்றின் தெற்கு நாற்பத்தொன்பதுநாடு கடல்கொண்டதாகலின். கிழக்கும் மேற்கும் கடலெல்லையாக. முடிதலின் வேறெல்லை கூறாராயினார்." "On the north Vēṅkaṭam (the Tripati hills), on the south by the river Kumari. These two boundaries form part of the country ; for, forty-nine districts to the south of the river Kumari have been swept away by the ocean. As the country is bounded on the east and west by the ocean, no separate boundary is mentioned by the author." As the same river Kumari is referred to in the Śilappadhikāram as a sea,* it is to be inferred that, when Tolgāppiyar wrote his grammar, Southern India had extended beyond the Cape Comorin, and that the extreme southern portion of the country included the river Kumari and forty-nine districts to the north of that river and to the south of the Pahruli river.† The tract of land which lay between the two rivers extended over 700 kāvadams, i.e., 7,000 miles, and it comprised the following districts : seven Teṅganāḍus, seven Maduraināḍus, seven Munpālaināḍus, seven Pinbālaināḍus, seven Kunranāḍus, seven Kuṇakāraināḍus, seven Kurumbanaināḍus, these forty-nine districts, Kumari, Kollam and other Panmalaināḍus, forests, rivers, towns up to the great northern bank of the Kumari river.† If this distinction of the southern portion of the country be a real fact, we have to infer that the grammar of Tolgāppiyar must be very ancient.

The preface refers to a Pāṇḍya under the adjective நிலந்தரு திருவின் which means 'wealthy and bestowing lands.' But the commentary gives the name of the Pāṇḍya as Mākīrti * (Sans. Mahākīrti) and says that he reigned for twenty-four thousand years.

The MS. under notice contains the commentary of Naccinārkkiniyar, which is the best and the latest of all the existing commentaries on the grammar of Tolgāppiyar. He was a very learned Jaina Brahman and seems to have mastered Tamil and Sanskrit, and, by writing commentaries on many great and important Tamil works, has done a service to Tamil literature which Mādhavacārya and Mallināthasūri have done for Sanskrit. In the colophons to the commentary he is said to have been a native of Madura and born of the Bhāradvāja gōtra.† He has commented on the following other works :—

1. Pattuppāṭṭu, an anthology which includes the following ten works: (1) Tirumurugaṟṟuppaḍai, (2) Porunarāṟṟuppaḍai, (3) Śiṟupāṇāṟṟuppaḍai, (4) Perumbāṇāṟṟuppaḍai, (5) Mullaippāṭṭu, (6) Maduraikkāñji, (7) Neḍunalvāḍai, (8) Kuṟiñjippāṭṭu, (9) Paṭṭiṉappālai, (10) Malaipaḍukaḍām or Kūttarāṟṟuppaḍai.

Naccinārkkiniyar is generally said to be a Śaiva ; but the statement which he makes at the beginning of his commentary in explanation of the passage அதங்கோட்டாசாற்கரிறபதெரிந்து,* leads me to think that he was not a Śaivite, but was rather a Jaina or Buddhist. The same idea is expressed * by him in his commentary on the Poruḷadhikāram on the sūtra "வேந்துவினையியற்கை வேந்தனின்ஒரீஇய, ஏனோர்மருங்கினு மெய்திடனுடைத்தே." He says, "As for the cause of his (Agastya's) saying 'Do not hear,' all the gods who had assembled on Mount Mēru requested Agastya to go to the south and remain there to keep up the balance when the whole earth which had bent on the southern side owing to the weight of all the gods. Before he went to the south, Agastya went to the Ganges and received the river Kāviri from her. He then proceeded to Yamadagniyār (Sans. Jamadagni) and received Tirunadhūmāgni (Sans. Tṛṇadhūmāgni) who was Tolgāppiyar himself. He married Lōpāmuttiraiyar who was given to him by her brother Pulattiyaṉār. He went to Tuvāravati (Sans. Dvāraka) and took the eighteen kings of the line of Kṛṣṇa (நிலங்கடந்த நெடுமுடியண்ணல்), the Vēlirs of the eighteen families and the Aruvāḷars. He denuded the country of its forests and made it inhabitable. He settled on the Mount Podiyil, and, having defeated Rāvaṇa by his skill in music, freed his habitation from the incursions of Rākṣasās. He makes Rāvaṇa a contemporary of Krisṇa's dynasty, which is opposed to the Hindu Purāṇas and Itihāsas. This opinion is supported by the Rāmāyaṇa of the celebrated Jain priest of Guzerat, Hēmacandra, according to which the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Kṛṣṇa was before that as Rāma.

* "இது மலையமாதவன் நிலங்கடந்த நெடுமுடியண்ணலுழை நரபதியருடன்கொணர்ந்த பதினெண்வகைக் குடிப்பிறந்த வேளிர்க்கும் வேந்தன் தொழில் உரித்தென்கின்றது." தொல். பொருள், p. 54.

There is a passage occurring in the commentary of Naccinārk-kiniyar which contains a very valuable information and is quoted below :—

"கடைச்சங்கத்தாருள் களவியற் பொருள்கண்ட கணக்காயனார் மகனார் நக்கீரர் 'இடைச்சங்கத்தார்க்கும் கடைச்சங்கத்தார்க்கும் நூலாயிற்றுத் தொல்காப்பியம்,' என்றாராகலானும்,"

From this passage we learn that the preface to the commentary on the Iraiyanāragapporul, which contains an account of the three ancient Saṅgams, was known to Naccinārkkiniyar. But I have already shown * that the preface was not written by Nakkīrar, but by a person who lived eight generations after Nakkīrar. Nakkīrar was a contemporary of Vaṁśaśēkhara Pāṇḍya who is assigned to the fifth or the sixth century A.C. (vide Essay on Tamil Literature, page 42). If the last of the series of eight teachers of the commentary of Nakkīrar be supposed to have flourished during the seventh or the eighth century, assigning twenty-five years to each generation, Naccinārkkiniyār, who quotes the passage from the preface, must have lived after the seventh or the eighth century.

Parimēlaḻagar, who wrote a commentary on the Kuraḷ, refers to Bhōja, king of Dhāra, in the following passage :—

"இச்சிறப்புப்பற்றி வடநூலுள் போசராசனும் 'சுவைபலவென்று கூறுவார்கூறுக; யாங்கூறுவது இன்பச்சுவை ஒன்றனையே' என இதனையே மிகுத்துக்கூறினான்."—Introd. to the commentary to the third part of Kuraḷ.

"Taking into consideration this importance, even King Bhōja says that, though other authors say that there are many sentiments, he would mention only the sentiment of love and he thus attached great importance to it."

From this reference we may conclude that Parimēlaḻagar lived after Bhōja. At this stage comes to our help a tradition, which makes Naccinārkkiniyar and Parimēlaḻagar contemporaries and states that the former was old when the latter was young. On the authority of the tradition, we may, for the present, rest with the conclusion that Naccinārkkiniyar lived after the time of Bhōja, i.e., the eleventh century A.C.

In support of the terminus aquo of the age of Naccinārkkiniyar arrived at now, I may mention the fact that Naccinārkkiniyar, in his commentary on the Jīvakacintāmani, quotes a passage* from the Kapardi-kārika, the author of which was Kapardisvāmi, who is supposed to have flourished about the eighth century and whose name is quoted by Rāmānuja in his Vēdārthasaṅgraha.

It is a noteworthy fact that Naccinārkkiniyar who has commented upon Cintāmaṇi, Kalittogai, Pattuppāṭṭu, &c., should not have commented upon the Śilappadhikāram, a poem which seems to be very old, and older than, and not inferior to, any of the works named above.

TOLGĀPPIYAM (ETYMOLOGY WITH THE COMMENTARY OF KALLĀḌAR).

The work under notice is a commentary on the second part of the Tolgāppiyam, viz., the chapter on Etymology, attributed to Kallāḍar, one of the poets of the third Tamil Saṅgam and author of the famous poetical work Kallāḍam and portions of Agaṉāṉūṟu, Puṟanāṉūṟu, Kuṟundogai and Tiruvaḷḷuvamālai; but from the nature and style of the commentary under notice, one would naturally be led to the conclusion that the commentary is the production of a very inferior hand.

Vīrasōḷiyam, is considered to have been a disciple of Buddhamitra, the author of the text, and a contemporary of Vīrasōḷa alias Kulōttuṅga I, who reigned between 1064—1113, the author of the work under notice must have flourished before the eleventh century. The commentator, whose name is not known, quotes authors and works very copiously, and I shall give, at the end of this notice, a list of them which I consider very useful as many of the names are scarcely known at present. It has enabled me to make several inferences which are very important for the history of Tamil Literature, and some of these are given below:—

(1) Poygaiyār, who is the author of the Kaḷavaḻinārpadu and portions of the anthologies called Naṟṟiṇai and Puṟanāṉūṟu, and also the Tamil Saint of the same name, are frequently referred to by the commentator without any attributes which may indicate a difference. The stanzas quoted from the First Tiruvandādi of the Iyaṟpā have been verified in the latter work with a slight difference, to illustrate some metrical peculiarity. I may also mention here the fact that Naccinārkkiniyar also refers to the Andādi abovementioned in the following passage :

அது முத்தொள்ளாயிரமும் பொய்கையார்முதலாயினோர்செய்த அந்தாதிச்செய்யுளும் எனவுணர்க.

"Instances of the poem are the Muttoḷḷāyiram and the Andādi composition of Poygaiyār and others."

From the identity of the names, we may infer that Poygaiyāḻvār was called simply Poygaiyār and was the author of the Kaḷavaḻinārpadu and portions of the Puṟanāṉūṟu and the Naṟṟiṇai as already said; that he was called Poygaiyāḻvār when he became a Saint; that he was a contemporary of Kōccengaṇāṉ, a Chōla king, and Kaṇaikkālirumporai, a Chēra king who was defeated in a battle by the former and was imprisoned. But when Poygaiyār composed the poem known by the name of Kaḷavaḻinārpadu in honor of the victorious Chōla, the latter ordered the release of the Chēra king; and the event shows what amount of respect and reverence the Chōla should have felt for the future Saint. I have roughly calculated the age of Kōccengaṇāṉ to be the seventh or the eighth century A.C., and the same age should be assigned to Pūdattāḻvār, Pēyāḻvār, and Tirumaḻiśaiyāḻvār, who were the contemporaries of Poygaiyāḻvār.

(2) The commentator of the Yāpparuṅgalam under notice quotes the name of Pērāśiriyar with certain attributes which belong to God Śiva, and they are as follow :—

1. பிறை நெடுமுடிக்கறைமிடற்றரனார்பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த பேராசிரியர் வேணியான்

2. நீர்மலிந்தவார்சடையோன் பேர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyar who gloried with the name of Śiva, who had the Ganges on his matted hair."

3. திரிபுரமெரித்தவர் பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyān . . . who burnt the three towns."

4. திரிபுரமெரித்தவிரிசடைநிருத்தர் பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே "Pērāsiriyar. . . . who burnt the three towns and had matted hair."

5. கறைமிடற்றோன் பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyar. . . . who had a black neck."

6. பெண்ணொருபாகன் பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyan . . . who had his wife as part of his body.

7. பெருமான்பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyan . . . Śiva.

8. பிறைமுடியோன் பெயர்மகிழ்ந்த—பே. "Pērāsiriyan. . . . who had a crescent of the moon on his crown."

9. வாமமேகலை மாதையோர்பாகனார் நாமமகிழ்ந்த நல்லாசிரியர். "Nallāśiriyar . . . who had the Goddess Pārvati as part of his body."

10 காமவேளைக்கறுத்தபுத்தேள் நாமந்தாங்கிய ந. "Nallāśiriyar who held the name of God Śiva, who burnt the God of love."

11. காமனைக் காய்ந்தவர் நாமமகிழ்ந்த ந—"Nallāśiriyar who gloried with the name of Śiva, who killed the God of love."

In these adjectives the word பேர்மகிழ்ந்த is doubtful in meaning as it may mean 'who rejoiced by the name (of Śiva),' that is, who was pious (to Śiva), or 'who gloried by the name of Śiva,' 'that is, who nobly held the name of Śiva. The use of the word தாங்கிய 'who held or had,' in the attribute No. 10, leads us to adopt the latter meaning. In some of the references we have the name of நல்லாசிரியர், which must refer to the same author from the nature of the attributes. We do not know why the commentator should refer to Pērāśiriyar with so many titles, all pointing to God Śiva. As, in the whole of Tamil Literature, there is only one poet who is identified with God Śiva, as far as I know, the references of the commentator must belong to the same person, that is, Iraiyaṉār of the third sangam.

We have now to settle a question which suggests itself, viz., whether the Pērāśiriyar (Iṟaiyaṉār) was the same as the person who goes by the same name and who wrote a commentary on the Tolgāppiyam, and who is also referred to by Naccinārkkiṉiyar in his commentary on the work, without any attribute. The identity is also warranted by the fact that Iṟaiyaṉār was a contemporary of Nakkīrar who is said to have flourished in the fifth or the sixth century, and that Pērāśiriyar who wrote the commentary of the Tolgāppiyam flourished before Naccinārkkiṉiyar who flourished after the eleventh century A.C. or subsequently

The work under notice is divided into the following chapters:—

I. Uṟuppiyalōttu, which is sub-divided into—

1. Eḻuttōttu.	4. Taḷaiyōttu.
2. Aśaiyōttu.	5. Aḍiyōttu.
3. Śīrōttu.	6. Toḍaiyōttu.

II. Séyyuḷiyalōttu.

III. Oḻibiyalōttu.

Apart from the Séyyuḷiyal of the Tolgāppiyam, this is the only work on Tamil Prosody that treats of the subject very copiously and with many examples and authorities. Another work written by the same author as a sequel to this, viz., Yāpparuṅgalakkārigai, is the only work now extant on the subject, the work under notice with its commentary being very rarely found in the libraries of Tamil paṇḍits. The text Sūtras alone were edited many years ago by Tāṇḍavarāya Mudaliar, an able Tamil pandit and the author of the Pañcatantra in Tamil prose. The work with its commentary under notice deserves to be printed and published;

but I am trying to get some more copies of the work for comparing and collating, before putting the work in printers' hands.

CLASS III.—LEXICON.

4. பிங்கலந்தை

PINGALANDAI.

This is a lexicon named after its author Piṅgalar, who was the son of Divākara. The father wrote a lexicon which is the first Tamil lexicon* known and extant, and is quoted by Aḍiyārkkunaliār and other commentators. Piṅgalar is mentioned in the Nannul and the Cūḍāmani lexicon in the following passages, respectively :—

" பிங்கலர் முதலா— நல்லோருரிச்சொலினயந்தனகொளலே"—Nannūl.
செங்கதிர்வரத்திற்றோன்றுந் திவாகரர்சிறப்பின்மிக்க
பிங்கலருரைநூற்பாவிற் பேணினர்செய்தார்சேர"—Cūdāmani.

The lexicon of Divākara was improved by the son in the Piṅgalandai by additions made here and there. The lexicon under notice is divided into ten parts, viz:—

1. வானவகை, Heaven Group.
2. வானவர்வகை, Deities Group.
3. ஐயர்வகை, Brahmans Group.
4. அவனிவகை, Earth Group.
5. ஆடவர்வகை, Men Group.
6. அநுபோகவகை, Enjoyment Group.
7. பண்பிற்செயலிற் பகுதிவகை, Quality and Group.
8. மாப்பெயர்வகை, Animal Group.
9. மரப்பெயர்வகை, Tree Group.
10. ஒருசொற் பலபொருள்வகை, Homonyms Group.

The above division of the work and the names of the ten chapters, indicate that the author was well acquainted with the Nāmaliṅgānuśasanam of Amarasiṁha, and the inference is confirmed by his introduction of many Sanskrit words with slight modifications into his lexicon; as, ஐயங்கவீனம், Aiyaṅgavīnam, Sans. Haiyaṅgavīnam, 'ghee obtained from yesterday's milk'; உதவகன் Utavagan, Sans. Hutavahan, 'god of fire, or fire' and the like. He mentions the eighteen Purāṇas, the eighteen Upapurāṇas, the eighteen Smṛtis, the following religions, Buddhism, Jainism, the religion of the Lōkāyatica, Mīmāṁsa, Pāñcarātra, Bhaṭṭācārya, Pāśupata, Śaiva, Bhairava, Vāma, Kālāmukha, and Māvita. He refers to the following kings and other personages, viz, the Chēra, the Chola, the Pāṇḍya, Pāri, Eḻili, Nalli, Āy, Malayaṉ, Ōri, and Pēyaṉ. He mentions the word Pallava among the synonyms of 'the mean,' from which we have to understand that, after the downfall of the Pallava kingdom at Kāñci, the Pallavas were persecuted by their enemies in such a way that the very name Pallava became a synonym for 'the mean.' He also refers to the Chalukya kings. From these references we can infer that the lexicon was written after the overthrow of the Pallavas and after the establishment of the Western Chalukya kingdom about the eighth century A.C.

CLASS IV.—POETRY.

5. சிலப்பதிகாரம்.

SILAPPADIKĀRAM.

One of the five great poems of the Tamil language, the remaining being Cintāmaṇi, Maṇimēkalai, Vaḷaiyāpati and Kuṇḍalakēśi. The author was Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ, the younger brother of a Chēra king called Śeṅguṭṭuvaṉ. The origin of the poem as given in the preface of the work is as follows:—The author Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ having resigned the cares of the world, became an ascetic and was living in a temple of Arha. The inhabitants of a hill called Śeṅguṉṟu assembled together and paid a visit to the royal sage and asked him to know the history of Kaṇṇagi to whom the deities had shown her husband in a divine form, and who departed to the celestial city to their infinite astonishment. Śittaḷaic-cāttaṉār, a poet who was near him and heard the above speech, replied: "I know the above occurrence. There is a town called Kāvirippūmbaṭṭiṉam in the country of Chola, in which lived a merchant named Kōvalaṉ. He loved a woman named Mādhavi on whom he had lavished all his property and was unable to pay her. He took one of his wife's anklets and went to sell it at Madura, and offered it for sale at the market. A goldsmith who was present seized it saying that the anklet was fit for none but the queen of Madura, and went to the palace where he showed it to the king and told him that the anklet of the queen which was missing was found in the hands of a thief who came from a foreign country. Having heard these words the king issued orders to his servants to behead the alleged thief, without enquiring into the case and discovering the truth. Kaṇṇagi not finding the whereabouts of her husband, became immensely distressed and caused the whole town of Madura to be burnt. She is the woman you speak of." Then the Chēra king Śeṅguṭṭuvaṉ who was near him, said: "You are speaking of the destiny of fate, what is it?" Poet Śāttaṉ replied: "When I was lying down in the temple of the God Śiva of Madura in the dark, I heard a celestial voice addressing to her to the following effect. Thou shalt see thy husband in a divine form on the night of the fourteenth day from hence." Thereupon Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ replied: "The goddess of virtue will punish and destroy wicked kings; the merits of Kaṇṇagi will be applauded not only by the men of this world, but also by the celestials; and the results of the actions of former birth will continue and make the authors of actions suffer the consequences of those actions. All these facts will be commemorated by the anklet, and we shall compose a poem naming it after the anklet." The poet rejoined: "The story concerns the three great kings—the Chēra, Chōḷa and the Pāṇḍya—therefore, you yourself undertake the work." Thereupon the royal sage composed the peom under notice. With reference to the assumption of the ascetic life by Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ, the younger brother of the Chēra king, the following passage occurs in the commentary of the Śilappadikāram by Aḍiyārkkunallār:—

ஓர் நிமித்திகன் அடிமுதல் முடிகாறும் இருவரையும் நோக்கி அரசுரிமை இளவற்குண்டென்றவளவில் செங்குட்டுவன் வெகுண்டுநோக்க அடிகள் துறவுபூண்டாரென்பது வரலாறு.

"The explanation is that a diviner who examined the persons of the two princes remarked that the younger would become the ruler of the kingdom; the elder thereupon looked very much disturbed in his mind; and the younger, therefore, became an ascetic."

The work is divided into three parts and thirty kādais or stories.

In the following stanzas which are taken from the book, references are made to the Pāṇḍya king Iḷañjeḷiyan̲, Il̲añgōvaraśar of Koṅgunāḍu, Kayavāhu of Ceylon, and the Chōla king Perunar̲kiḷḷi.

"From that time the Pāṇḍya Kingdom was visited with drought and diseases of various kinds, and Ver̲r̲ivēr̲celiyan̲, who was at Kor̲kai (கொற்கை) solemnized feasts in her honour and by sacrificing a thousand goldsmiths to her, appeased her anger; and from that time there has been plenty of rain, and the country has enjoyed its usual prosperity.

"The king of Koṅgu, named Iḷaṅgōvaraśar, having heard that event, solemnized feasts in honour of Kaṇṇagi and performed expiatory ceremonies and has had no drought ever since.

"Then the king of Ceylon, named Kayavāhu, having heard that event, built temples to Kaṇṇagi with altars on which daily sacrifices were offered, and, hoping that the goddess would remove troubles and grant all boons, frequently held feasts in his town annually in the month of Āḍi (July), and, in consequence of this, there has been plenty of rain, which has rendered the country very rich and productive.

"Then the Chōla king Perunaṟkiḷḷi hoping to receive all boons from the goddess, built temples for her at Kōḷi, that is, Uṟaiyūr, and solemnized feasts."

All the events referred to in the above passages must have occurred before the composition of the poem or a little later.

Now, from the above, we can easily see that Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ, the author of the book, Śittalai-cāttaṉār, who saw Kaṇṇagi when she received the assurance from the guardian deity of Madura that she would see her husband on the fourteenth day, Kaṇṇagi, Mādhavi, and Kōvalaṉ, who are the chief characters of the Śilappadhikāram, were contemporaries, and that all lived in the time of Karikālacōla as Mādhavi danced at the court of that monarch.

These were also the contemporaries of the Pāṇḍya Veṟṟivēṟceḻiyaṉ, the king of Madura, Perunaṟkiḷḷi,* a Chola king, Iḷaṅgōvaraśar, a king of the Koṅgn country, and Kayavāhu, a king of Ceylon, who are said in the poem to have built temples to the deified Kaṇṇagi in their respective countries. The dates of the first three kings cannot be ascertained by any means; but by referring to the histories of Ceylon, we can pretty approximately arrive at the date of the last-mentioned king. I consulted a work on the history of Ceylon, named "Ceylon by an officer late of the Ceylon Rifles." It contains a long list of the kings of Ceylon beginning with Vijaya, the first Aryan prince who settled in the island and established the Buddhist religion there in 543 B.C. There are two Gajabāhus in the list, one began to reign in 113 A.C., and the other, in about 1127 A.C., and the Kayabāhu under discussion must be one of them. With regard to the identity of the two names, I may say that the name given in the Ceylon history is Gajabāhu, which is identical with the original Sanskrit word, meaning "one who has arms like the proboscis of an elephant." It comes through the Pāli language, a kind of Prakrit in which the earliest chronicle of Ceylon called Mahāvaṁso was written by Mohānāman between 457 and 477 A.C. But the Tamil name Kayavāhu is a corruption of the Sanskrit Gajabāhu. As to the identity of the persons I think the Ceylon prince mentioned in the Śilappadhikāram must be the first Gajabāhu of Ceylon, as the second is said to have commenced to reign in 1127, a date which is posterior to that assigned to Kulōttuṅga who reigned from 1064 to 1113 A.C. As the first Karikāla preceded Kulōttuṅga by several centuries (vide Madras Archæological Reports, Vol. VI, p. 205), he must have been the contemporary of Gajabāhu I. But it may be contended that the name is applied to many Chōla kings as can be seen from the various inscriptions recorded in the 'Archæological Reports of Southern India'; but we are concerned only with Karikāla mentioned in Tamil literature, as there is only one of that name as far as I know. His father was known by the name of Iḷañjētcenni, according to a passage in the Porunarārruppaḍai which is as follows:— வெல்வேல் உருவப்பஃறேரிளையோன் சிறுவன், on which the commentator says வென்ற வேலினையுடைய அழகினையுடைத்தாகிய பலதேரினையுடைய இளஞ்சேட் சென்னியுடைய புதல்வன்.

* We have to ascertain yet whether the king Perunaṟkiḷḷi was the same as Karikāla; and if it is not, then he must be the son of the latter.

"Son of Iḷañjēṭcenni who held a victorious sword and had many beautiful chariots."

The above commentator Naccinārkkiniyar in another place * says: உருவப்பஃறே ரிளஞ்சேட்சென்னி அழுந்தூர்வேளிடை மகட்கோடலும் அவன் மகனாகிய கரிகாற்பெருவளத்தான் நாங்கூர் வேளிடைமகட்கோடலும்.

"The facts that Iḷañjēṭcenni received the daughter of the prince of Aḻundūr, and that his son Karikārperuvaḷattān, the daughter of the prince of Nāṅgūr." (Vide Com. of Poruladhikāram.)

With regard to the name of Karikāla, Naccinārkkiniyar adds three stanzas at the end of his commentary of the Porunarārruppaḍai

* His commentary on the Poruladhikāram, Agattiṇaiyiyal, sūtra 30.

which were composed by himself or others and are found in the colophon of the copies of the work. One of them is as follows :—

முச்சக்கரமுமளப்பதற்கு நீட்டியகால்
இச்சக்கரமேயளந்ததால்—செய்ச்செய்
அரிகான் மேற்றேன் றொடுக்குமாய் புனனீர்நாடன்
கரிகாலன் கானெருப்புற்று.

"As the foot which was stretched out to measure the three worlds measured only this world, the king who possessed countries in which bees built their hives on the stalks of the paddy growing in every field, had his leg burnt and became Karikāla."

From the above stanza we learn that the name was given to him in reference to the fact that he had a black leg owing to the injury received from fire. This name must have some signification, only when it is applied to that prince and not to any of his descendants who must have assumed the name as an honorific title. We must, therefore, infer that the passages refer only to the first Karikāla and not to any of his descendants. We thus see from the historical as well as literary sources that the age of Karikāla and Iḷaṅgōvaḍigaḷ and Śīttalaiccāttaṉār was prior to the existence of the third Saṅgam, that Karikāla flourished about 113 A.C., when Gajabāhu began to reign in Ceylon, and that, consequently, the Śilappadhikāram was written long before the works of the third Saṅgam, that is, in the second century A.C.

This a short commentary on the Śilappadhikāram by an author whose name is not known. It is, notwithstanding its shortness, very useful, and was consulted by Aḍiyārkkunallār, who wrote a commentary which has been printed with the above commentary. Śilappadhikāram with Adiyārkkunallār's Commentary.

This is a commentary on the Śilappadhikāram written by Aḍiyārkkunallār, who, as he refers to Naccinārkkiniyar and Iḷampūraṇar, must have lived at a later time than the latter. His proper name seems to be Nirambaiyarkāvalan as shown in the following stanza:—

ஒருந்தமிழொருமூன்று முலகின்புறவகுத்துச்
சேரன்றொகுத்த சிலப்பதிகாரத்திற் சேர்ந்தபொருள்
ஆருந்தெரிய வுரைவிரித்தானடியார்க்கு நல்லான்
காருந்தருவுமனையானிரம்பையர் காவலனே

But the pandits of Madras have taken அடியார்க்கு நல்லார் as the proper name of the author, and, if that is right, the word நிரம்பையர் காவலன் must be an epithet and may mean the king of Nirambaiyar. The word Nirambaiyar seems to mean the people of Nirambai, which may be the name of a place. Some pandits agree with me that the author's name is Nirambaiyakāvalan and Aḍiyārkkunallār, an epithet.

In the following stanza he refers to Boppaṇa Gāṅgeya, a king who patronized him :—

காற்றைப்பிடித்துக் கடத்திலடைத்துக் கடியபெருங்

We know nothing about the history of Aḍiyārkkuuallār, but from his commentary we can infer that he was a great Tamil scholar well versed in all branches of Tamil literature. His knowledge of music and drama—subjects, which have been sadly neglected by the majority of the later Tamil pandits—is displayed in a most creditable way in explanations of all the passages, terms and expressions of the book which bear on tho subjects. In the author's time itself many of the works on them seem to have been lost and to have remained only in passages quoted from them in later works. In the preface to his commentary Aḍiyārkkunallār says that works on music and drama, such as Perunārai, Peruṅkurugu, Pañcabhāratīyam, and Guṇanūl, Muṟuval, Śayantam and Śeyiṟṟiyam, do not exist; and only quoted passages remain of them.

KĀRNĀṞPADU.

This is a short poem consisting of forty stanzas, and is one of the eighteen poems known by the collective name of the Padiṉeṉkīḻkkaṇakku. * It was composed by Madurai Kaṇṇaṉkūttaṉār, and describes the anxiety of a woman suffering from the absence of her husband who went abroad promising to return within the rainy season, but did not return according to the promise. There is a short commentary which explains some of the stanzas and omits the rest.

TIṆAIMĀLAINŪṞṞAIMBADU.

This poem is attributed to Kaṇimēdāviyār, a disciple of Tamiḻāśiriyar Mākkāyaṉāṟ. This is a short poem on the five kinds of actions of the lovers as Kuṟiñji, Marudam, &c., thirty stanzas being devoted to the description of each of them. This poem is frequently quoted by Naccinarkkiniyar. There are only the first nineteen * stanzas in all the available manuscripts, and of these ten are quoted by Naccinarkkiniyar. There is a commentary on this poem. This is also one of the eighteen poems collectively known by the name of the Padinenkilkkanakku.

10. திணைமொழி ஐம்பது.

TINAIMOLIYAIMBADU.

This is a short poem on love by Kannanjendanar, son of Sāttandaiyār, who also seems to have written a poem, as a stanza is quoted in the Puranānuru in his name. The poem under notice contains fifty stanzas and describes the five kinds of the feelings of love devoting ten stanzas to each of them. There is an old commentary on the poem. It is also one of the eighteen poems known by the collective name of the Padinenkilkkanakku, and it is quoted by Naccinarkkiniyar, in his commentary on the Poruladhikāram of Tolgappiyar in illustration of the rules of the description of the love-sentiments in poetry.

INNĀNĀRPADU.

A didactic poem consisting of forty stanzas, containing an enumeration of everything that is unpleasant. It is also one of the Padinenkilkkanakku, 'eighteen poems', which are collectively called so. The author was one of the forty-nine poets, who are said to have constituted the third Sangam and is named Kapila Dēvar. He is said to have been a contemporary of Tiruvalluvar and to have written a eulogistic stanza on his Kural.

The author wrote also portions of the Aingurunūru, the Padirrupattu, the Aganānūru, the Puranānūru, the Narrinai, the PAḺAMOḺI.

Paḻamoḻi, a poem on moral subjects in 400 stanzas, each stanza containing a proverb, by Muṉṟuṟai Araiyaṉ, and the name of the author means 'King of Muṉṟuṟai,' and does not appear to be the proper name of the author. He uses such words as கோணாய், மரிசாதி and the like and expressions which are peculair to Southern India, and from this fact we have to infer that he lived in the southern part of the Pāṇḍya Kingdom. The author seems to be a Jaina by faith, as can be inferred from the stanza quoted below. The work is also included in the eighteen poems which are collectively known by the name of Padinēṉ kīḻkkaṇakku The following is the preface (சிறப்புப்பாயிரம்) to the poem, and refers to the author's name :—

Beginning:

உயர்திணையென்மனார் மக்கட்சுட்டே
யஃறிணையென்மனா ரவரலபிறவே
யாயிருதிணையி னிசைக்குமனசொல்லே.

என்பது சூத்திரம்.

இவ்வதிகாரம் மேற்பாயிரத்துள் "எழுத்துஞ் சொல்லும் பொருளு நாடி" என நிறுத்தமுறையானே எழுத்துணர்த்திச் சொல்லுணர்த்து கின்றாராதலின் சொல்லதிகாரமென்னும் பெயர்த்தாயிற்று; அது 'சொல்லையுணர்த்திய முறைமை' எனவிரியும்

சொல் என்றது எழுத்தினா னாக்கப்பட்டு இருதிணைப் பொருட்டன்மையும் ஒருவனுணர்தற்குக் கருவியாமோசையை. ஈண்டு ஆக்கப்படு தலென்றது - ஒருசொற்கூறுமிடத்து ஓரெழுத்துப் போக ஓரெழுத்துக் கூறுவதல்லது ஒருசொல்லாகமுடியும் எழுத்தெல்லாம் சேரக்கூறலா காமையின் அவ்வெழுத்துகள் கூறிய அடைவேபோயிற்றேனுங் கேட்டார்கருத்தின்கண் ஒருதொடராய் நிலைபெற்றுநின்று பொருளை அறிவுறுத்தலை; ஆயின் ஓரெழுத்தொருமொழிக்கு ஆக்குதலின்றாலெனின், ஓரெழுத்தொருமொழியைக் கூறியக்கால் அதுவுஞ்செவிப்புல னாய்க் கருத்தின்கண் நிகழ்ந்து பின்னர்பொருளையாக்குதலின் அது வும் ஆக்குந்தன்மையுடைத்தாயிற்று.

இருதிணைப்பொருளுமாவன: ஐம்பாற் பொருளின் பகுதியாகிய காட்சிப்பொருளுங் கருத்துப்பொருளும் அவற்றின் பகுதியாகிய ஐம்பெரும் பூதங்களும் அவற்றின்பகுதியாகிய இயங்குதிணையும் நிலைத்திணையுமாம். இவையெல்லாம் ஐம்பாலாயடங்கின.

இனிப் பொருட்டன்மையாவது—மக்கட்டன்மையும் இயங்குதிணைத் தன்மையும் நிலைத்திணைத்தன்மையுமாம். இத்தன்மை ஒருபொருட் குக் கேடுபிறந்தாலுந் தனக்குக்கேடின்றித் தானொன்றேயாய்ப் பல வகைப்பட்டபொருடோறு நிற்குமென்றுணர்க.

கருவியாவது—அப்பொருட்டன்மையை ஒருவனுணர்தற்கு அவ்வோசைகருவியாய் நிற்றல். இதனை ஐம்பொறிகள் ஒருவன் பொருள்களை உணர்தற்குக் கருவியாய் நின்முற்போலக் கருவியாய் நிற்குமென்றுணர்க.

இனி, ஓசையைச் சொல்லென்றிரேல் கடலொலி சங்கொலி விண்ணொலி முதலியனவுஞ் சொல்லாகாவோவெனின், சொல் இது முன்பு யானுணர்ந்த எழுத்தென்றே பின்பு கூறியக்காலும் உணர நிற்றலின் கேடின்றி நிலைபேறுடையதாயிற்று. இவை அங்ஙனம் உணர்தலாற்றாமையானும் எழுத்திஞனுக்கப்படாமையானும் நிலைபேறிலவாயின; ஆதலின் சொல்லெனப்படா; அன்றியும், ஓசை அரவம் இசை என்பனபோலன்றிக் கிளவி சொல் மொழி என்பன எழுத்திஞனுகிய வோசையை உணர்த்தும். முற்கு வீளை முதலியன எழுத்திஞனுக்கப்படாமையின் சொல்லாகா.

இனி, ஒருசாரார் எழுத்திஞனுகிய வோசையுங் கெடுமென்பர். உரையாசிரியரும், 'சொல்லென்பது எழுத்திஞனுக்கப்பட்டுத்திணையறிவுறுக்குமோசை' என்றும், 'தன்னையுணர நின்றவழி எழுத்தெனப்படும், தான் இடைநின்று பொருளுணர்த்தியவழிச் சொல்லெனப்படும்' என்றுங்கூறினுர் அக்கருத்தேபற்றி. இனி, சேனவரையர் 'சொல் பொருள்குறித்துவரும்' என்முராலெனின், ஒருவன் பொருட்டன்மையை யுணர்தற்குச் சொல் கருவியாய் நிற்றலன்றித் தனக்கோருணர்வின்மையின் தான் ஒருபொருளைக்கருதி நிற்றலின்றெனமறுக்க.

அச்சொல்லை எட்டுவகையானும் எட்டிறந்த பல்வகையானுமுணர்த்துப.

(1) இரண்டுதிணையும், (2) ஐந்துபாலும், (3) எழுவகைவழுவும், (4) எட்டுவேற்றுமையும், (5) ஆறெட்டும், (6) மூன்றிடமும், (7) மூன்றுகாலமும், (8) வழக்குஞ்செய்யுளுமாகிய விரண்டிடமும், என எட்டுவகையானுணர்த்துப.

இனி, எட்டிறந்த பல்வகையாவன: சொல் நான்குவகையவென்றலும், அவற்றையே பலவாகப்பகுத்தலும், விகாரவகையும், பொருள்கோள்வகையும், செய்யுட்குரிய சொல் நான்கென்றலும் பிறவுமாம்.

அச்சொற்றுன் தனிமொழியும் தொடர்மொழியுமென இருவகைப்படும். தனிமொழிபொருள்விளக்குமாறு "நிலந்தீ நீர்வளி விசும்போடைந்துங், கலந்த மயக்கமுலகமாகலி, னிருதிணை யைம்பாலியனெறி வழாமைத், திரிவில் சொல்லொடு தழாஅல்வேண்டும்" என்னும் மரபியற் சூத்திரத்தானுணர்க. தொடர்மொழி இருமொழித்தொடரும் பன்மொழித்தொடருமென இருவகைப்படும். அவை தொடருங்காற் பயனிலைவகையானும் தொகைநிலைவகையானும் எண்ணுநிலைவகையானுந்தொடரும்.

இனி, வடநூலோர் கூறியவாறே அவர்ய்நிலையானும் அண்மை நிலையானும் தகுதியானுந் தொடருமென்றுமாம்.

சாத்தன், உண்டான், மன், நனி என்பன தனிமொழி. சாத்தன் வந்தான், இது பயனிலைத்தொடர். யானைக்கோடு, இது தொகைநிலைத் தொடர். நிலநீர், இது எண்ணுநிலைத்தொடர். இவை இருமொழித்தொடர். அறம்வேண்டியரச னுலகம்புரந்தான் என்பது பன்மொழித்தொடர்.

வழுக்களைந்து சொற்களை அமைத்துக்கோடலின் இவ்வோத்துக் கிளவியாக்க மென்னும் பெயர்பெற்றது. இனிச், சொற்கள்பொருள் கண்மேலாமாறுணர்த்தினமையிற் கிளவியாக்கமென்னும்பெயர் பெற்றதென்றுமாம்; ஒருவன்மேலாமாறிது, ஒருத்திமேலாமாறிது, பலர்மேலாமாறிது, ஒன்றன்மேலாமாறிது, பலவற்றின்மேலாமாறிது, வழுவாமாறிது, வழுவமையுமாறிது எனப்பொருள்கண்மேலாமாறுணர்த்தினமையின்.

இனி, இத்தலைச்சூத்திரம் சொல்லும்பொருளும்வரையறுத்துணர்த்துகின்றது.

(இச்சூத்திரத்தின்பொருள்) மக்கட்சுட்டே எ-து மக்களாகிய நன்கு மதிக்கப்படும்பொருளை, உயர்திணை என்மனார் எ-து உயர்திணையென்று கூறுவர்தொல்லாசிரியர்; அவர் அலபிற ஏ எ-து மக்களல்லாத பிறபொருளை, அஃறிணையென்மனார் எ-து அஃறிணையென்று கூறுவர் தொல்லாசிரியர்; அ இருதிணையின் இசைக்குமன சொல் ஏ எ-து அவ்விருதிணைப்பொருள்களையும் உணர்த்தும் சொற்கள் என்றவாறு.

ஏகாரமூன்றும் ஈற்றசை. இனைத்தெனவறிந்தவும்மை விகாரத்தாற்றொக்கது. "இசைப்பிசையாகும்" என்றதனால் இசைப்பு ஒலிக்குமென்னும் பொருடந்ததெனின் சொல்லுக்குப் பொருளுணர்த்தும்வழியல்ல தொலித்தல் கூடாமையின் உணர்த்துமென்னுந்தொழிலினை இசைக்குமென்னுந் தொழிலாற்கூறினார்; இதுவும் ஓர்மரபு வழுவமைதி. பொருளை யுணர்த்துவான் ஒருசாத்தனே யெனினும் அவற்கு அதுகருவியாகவல்லது உணர்த்தலாகாமையின் அக்கருவிமேற்றொழில் வேற்றிச் சொல் உணர்த்துமென்றது கருவிகருத்தாவாகக் கூறினார். இவ்வாசிரியர் எவ்விடத்துஞ் சொல்லைக் கருவிகருத்தாவாகக்கூறுமாறு மேலேகாண்க. அது "எல்லாச்சொல்லும் பொருள்குறித்தனவே" என்றாற்போல்வன.

இச்சூத்திரத்தாற் பொருளிரண்டு சொல்லிரண்டென வரையறுத்தார்.

உயர்திணை என்பது—உயர்ந்தவொழுக்கமென இறந்தகால வினைத்தொகை; அது ஆகுபெயராய் மக்கட்பொருளை உணர்த்தி நின்றது.

இதனைப்பண்புத்தொகை 'யென்பாருமுளர், அது பொருந்தாது; என்னை: இது காலந்தோன்ற நிற்றலின். மக்கட்சுட்டென்பது மக்களாகிய சுட்டென இருபெயரொட்டுப் பண்புத்தொகை, சுட்டு-நன்குமதிப்பு; அது ஆகுபெயராய் மக்கட்பொருளை உணர்த்திநின்றது. சேனாவரையர் இதனைப் 'பண்புத்தொகைப்புறத்துப் பிறந்த அன்மொழித்தொகை' என்றாராலெனின், இருபெயரொட்டாகுபெயர்க்கும் அன்மொழித்தொகைக்கும் வேறுபாடுணராமற் கூறினமையின் அதுபொருந்தாது; என்னைவேறுபாடெனின், ஈண்டு ஆகுபெயராய்நின்றநன்குமதிக்கும்பொருளும் மக்களையே யுணர்த்திநிற்கும்; அன்மொழித்தொகை அவ்வாறன்றி வெள்ளாடையென்றால் வெண்மையும் ஆடையுமன்றி உடுத்தானையே உணர்த்திநிற்கும்; இது தம்முள்வேற்றுமை. "அம்மொழிநிலையாதன்மொழிநிலையலும்" என்புழி "வெள்ளாடைஎன்புழி தொக்க இருமொழிமேலும் நில்லாது உடுத்தானென்னும் அன்மொழிமேனின்றது" என்று உதாரணங் காட்டினார் சேனாவரையரும் என்றுணர்க. அஃறிணை—அவ்வொழுக்கமல்லவாகியவொழுக்கம் எனப் பண்புத்தொகை. அதுபொருளையுணர்த்தி நின்றது, ஆகுபெயராய். என்மனார் என்றது 'ஆரீற்று நிகழ்காலமுற்றுவினைத்திரிசொல். என்றிசினோரே என்பது அவ்வாறு வந்த இறந்தகாலமுற்று வினைத்திரிசொல். இனிச் சேனாவரையர் 'மக்கட்சுட்டு' என்பதற்கு "மக்களாகிய சுட்டுயாதன்கணிகழும் அது மக்கட்சுட்டு" என்றும், 'ஆயிருதிணை யினிசைக்குமனசொல்லே' என்பதற்குச் "சொன்னிகழ்ச்சிக்குப் பொருள் இடமாதலின் ஆயிருதிணையின்கண்ணென ஏழாவது விரிக்க" என்றும் பொருள் கூறினாராலெனின், முன்னர் 'மக்களென்றுகருதப்படும் பொருளை உயர்திணையென்ப' என்று அவர் கண்ணழிவு கூறியது ஒரு பொருளிடத்து நின்ற மக்கட்டன்மையாலே ஒருவற்கு அப்பொருள் மக்களென்று கருதப்பட்டதென்று பொருடந்துநின்றது. பின்னர் மக்களாகிய சுட்டுயாதன்கணிகழுமென்றது நோக்குகின்றவர்க்கு மக்களாகிய கருத்து யாதொரு பொருளிடத்துத்தோன்றுமென்று பொருடந்தால் வெள்ளாடையென்னும் பண்புத்தொகைபோல அக்கருத்து மக்களாகாமையிற் பண்புத்தொகை அன்றாம். அது மக்கட் சுட்டென்பதற்

NOTES.

Page 24.—I am obliged to Mahāmahōpādhyāya Hara-prasada Sastri, the learned Professor of Sanskrit, Presidency College, Calcutta, for the following information. The word वन्द्दिघटी is modified as बाडुरी and is the name of a village lying in the Rādha country in the Murshadabad district. This village was granted to one of the fifty-six descendants of the five Brahmans brought by Ādisura from Kanaurje about a thousand years ago. The higher class of the descendants of the Bandighaṭi Brahmans are known by their titles as Banarjis. Raghunandana, one of the greatest Smṛti compilers of Bengal, styles himself Bandighaṭīya Hariharātmaja.

The term Ārtihara, which occurs among the titles of Sarvānanda, the author of the Ṭīkāsarvasva, is well known in Bengal and occurs in the Kulapanjis or family records of those families and denotes a person who has married a girl of superior status. The corresponding words are Khemahara, which denotes a person who has married a girl of equal position, and Uchitahara, which is applied to a person who has married a girl of lower position.

The word Banārji is to be derived from Bāḍuri ojha. Bāḍuri has been already shown to be a corruption of Bandighaṭi; and Ojha is a contraction of the Sanskrit word Upādhyāya and is, as such, connected with the Tamil and Malayalam word Ochchan, a temple priest, Kan. ója and Tel. ōjja.
